POLITICAL TOURS FIND WET ISSUE AROUSING STATE

Campaign Hits Fast Pace for Off Year.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

Republican and Democratic leaders returning from downstate tours alike reported yesterday that the wet and dry issue has brought the workers to their tiptoes already, party lines are intact, audiences are the largest experienced in an off year, and, as the poet said: "God's in his heaven; all's right with the world."

Rival chiefs declared the reactions they brought home were that the independent candidacy of Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill for senator so far seems to have made little headway among the dry Republican and dry Democratic vote. Both sides said one noticeable effect of the third candidacy has been to add to the velocity of the campaign by speeding up the workers in both major parties.

G. O. P. to Start New Tour.

Another invasion of the countryside is to start this week. The Republican caravan, which has just finished a tour of the fifteen downstate congressional districts, will open a follow-up tour which will take the candidates into all of the counties. It will be the speaking campaign; the one just finished was for organization.

Led by Ruth Hanna McCormick seeking for senator, the candidates for state offices and the local county, legislative, and congressional tickets, the G. O. P. will concentrate on downstate, leaving Cook county for a final drive of about a fortnight. The date of starting and the itinerary were being mapped out yesterday by the state committee.

Lewis Begins Swing Tomorrow.

James Hamilton Lewis, Democratic nominee, tomorrow starts on an itinerary that will kept him speaking downstate until Oct. 15. Tomorrow he is to make Woodstock, Marengo, Harvard, Belvidere, Rockford, Byron, Oregon, Dixon, Ashton, and back to Rockford for a night rally. Today Mr. Lewis is to be the main speaker at the Democratic picnic at River view Park.

Democratic state headquarters announced that every county in Illinois has been sending in letters asking for a Lewis meeting, and that "enthusiasm is breaking records for this period in an off year fight."

Democrats Hit at Fess.

The liquor issue predominated in developments. Democratic headquarters amplified the "King Canute Fess" appellation bestowed by Mr. Lewis upon Senator Simeon D. Fess, Republican national chairman, who declared a few days ago that prohibition is not an issue unless the Democrats make it so.

Mr. Lewis said Mr. Fess might as well "with a regal gesture command the waves to go back, or with a broom sweep back the tide." Headquarters yesterday said that strangely enough the liquor issue was first put into modern politics in Mr. Fess' home state, Ohio, the birthplace of the Anti-Saloon league.

Senator Wesley L. Jones of Washington, father of the five and ten law and senate floor leader for the Anti-Saloon league, and Senator Thomas J. Walsh of Montana, a pillar of the 18th amendment, were brought into the Illinois argument.

Letter from Women's Clubs.

The point that these two militant dry take the same position as to a referendum as does Mrs. McCormick was emphasized by the Illinois Republican Women's clubs, in a letter from Mrs. George R. Dean, president, addressed to "Friends of Law Enforcement." The letter says:

"Senator Thomas J. Walsh, one of the distinguished Democratic members of the United States senate and one of the ablest defenders of the dry cause, has taken a position identical with that of Mrs. McCormick in declaring that he will abide by a referendum in his state of Montana.

"United States Senator Wesley L. Jones of Washington, a Republican and a militant dry, author of the Jones five and ten law, has also declared that he will abide by the result of the referendum in his state. It would be just as absurd to assert that Senators Walsh and Jones had abandoned their demand for law enforcement as it is to accuse Mrs. McCormick of having done so.

Charges Speech Misquoted.

"Ruth Hanna McCormick is the only woman ever nominated for the United States senatorship with a reasonable hope of election. She is a dry, personally and politically. She advocates

AMERICAN YACHT WINS FIRST RACE; CUBS IN 3D PLACE

Enterprise, American defender, yesterday defeated Sir Thomas Lipton's yacht Shamrock V. in the first race of 1930 series for the America's cup, off Newport, R. I. The American yacht won by 2 minutes and 52 seconds.

The Cubs fell to third place in the National league race yesterday by losing to the Phillies, 7 to 5, while St. Louis beat Boston, 8 to 2, and Brooklyn defeated Cincinnati, 4 to 3. Only one game of the Cubs' scheduled double header was played, the second having been called off on account of rain in the third inning.

The defeat of the Cubs enabled the Cardinals to take first place by two points. Both the Cards and the Robins lead the Cubs by one-half game.

2 FLYERS TRYING 4,500 MI. JUMP ACROSS PACIFIC

Head North Over the Great Circle Route.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SAMISHIRO BEACH, Sambongi, Japan, Sept. 14 [Sunday].—Two daring flyers at dawn today began one of the most perilous flights ever attempted. Lieut. Harold L. Bromley and his navigator, Harold Gatty, took off in their plane, City of Tacoma, for a nonstop flight across the Pacific ocean to Tacoma, Wash. The start was made in excellent weather at 5:08 a. m. [3:08 p. m. Saturday, Chicago daylight saving time].

A little more than five hours later, at 10:30 a. m. [8:30 p. m. Saturday, Chicago time], amateur radio operators, who are in continuous communication with the big red monoplane, reported that the airmen were flying off the Kurile islands at the perilously low altitude of 33 feet. Due to a ban by the communications department nothing regarding what Lieut. Bromley is sending by radio may be reported. Weather conditions along the route, however, continue to be good.

Crowds Cheer Takeoff.

The beginning of this perilous flight, which has never before been accomplished, was without incident. Lieut. Bromley and Gatty, after spending the night at Yasuno inn at Sambongi, arose at 1:30 a. m. and took a light breakfast before proceeding to the beach. There they were greeted by Lieutenant Commander Ohta, naval commanding officer, and hundreds of spectators, including many Americans. The machine was tested at 4 a. m. In the meantime the crowd had increased to 800. Then champagne was drunk to the success of the flight with shouts of "Banzai!"

The blocks under the wheels of the City of Tacoma were removed and at 5:08 a. m. the plane took off. After rising to an altitude of about 5,500 feet it flew south for a couple of miles before turning left and taking a course to the northeast, to begin the nonstop flight to Tacoma.

Follow Great Circle Route.

The course which the aviators will follow will take them along the Kurriles island chain of northern Japan and then north over a long ocean jump to the rocky Aleutian islands. After reaching the Aleutians the route is uncertain, depending on weather conditions. They may set a course southward across the ocean direct to Tacoma, or, if their fuel supply runs low, they may head for Alaska to refuel. Their big ship at the takeoff carried 1,020 gallons of gasoline.

The City of Tacoma, a monoplane with a 425 horsepower engine, is equipped with radio, capable of communicating 2,500 miles, and it is expected to be in constant communication with several ships now plying between Japan and the United States along the route followed by the flyers. Lieut. Bromley hoped to cover the 4,500 mile trip in about forty-six hours, or at a speed of about 100 miles an hour.

His Fourth Attempt.

Lieut. Bromley cracked up three planes in attempts to fly from the United States to Japan. He then decided that because of prevalent adverse winds from Tacoma to Tokio a much larger gasoline supply than the ship's tanks could hold would be necessary, so he shipped his fourth plane here.

Lieut. Bromley is a Canadian and 30 years of age. He is married and has a 6 year old son. He conducts a flying school at Tacoma.

Gatty is 37 years of age and has a wife and three children.

Atlantic Flyers Down.

HARBOR GRACE, N. F., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Airport officials here tonight said they had received word from Charlottetown, Prince Edward island, that the plane Columbia, bearing Capt. Erroll Boyd and Lieut. Harry Connor, landed there tonight. The flyers left St. Hubert airport, Montreal, for Harbor Grace this morning on the first leg of a projected trans-Atlantic flight.

The officials said word had been sent them that the Columbia reached Cape Breton when it ran into stormy head winds, rain and poor visibility. The flyers decided it was unwise to attempt a landing here tonight so they turned back to Charlottestown. The information received here was that they would take off for Harbor Grace in time to reach here at noon tomorrow.

OAK PARK GIRL WHO WROTE PRIZE NOVEL RAPS U. S. COLLEGES

New York, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—A girl just can't get an adequate education in the United States, according to Miss Betty White, who recently pocketed a check for $3,000 for a prize-winning novel of life as it is lived on the campus.

Native of Oak Park, Ill., Miss White herself went looking for a real education at Northwestern university, but failed to find it, she declared today, upon her arrival here from Cambridge, Mass., where she is working on her second novel.

"They don't understand what education means in the co-ed universities," she said. "The presidents are interested in getting money and building bigger stadia. The boys take only courses that they think will help them later in business and the girls join sororities and study just to keep the sorority average high."

The girls in the state universities, she says, usually are more intelligent than the men, while the men students in the eastern colleges are superior to those of the co-ed institutions.

BABY BORN AFTER MOTHER IS STRUCK BY AUTO; BOTH DIE

Mrs. Leonard Spiegel, 39 years old, 114 South Elmwood avenue, Waukegan, died in St. Therese's hospital in Waukegan last night of injuries received when she was struck by an automobile in Waukegan last Monday. She was escorting two children to their school at the time of the accident.

A day after she was taken to the hospital Mrs. Spiegel gave birth to a baby. The infant died two hours later. The death was attributed to the accident.

S. S. Shapiro, a tailor of Milwaukee, the driver of the automobile, was arrested, charged with assault with a deadly weapon, and later released under a $500 bond. His case will be tried in Waukegan police court on Sept. 18. An inquest into the deaths will be held today or Monday.

Marine Band to Thrill City Next Tuesday

Fifty bandsmen trained in the rigors of marine corps life—who rehearse their music daily with the same intentness required of a soldier at drill—make up the rank and file of the United States Marine band, "The President's Own," which plays here Tuesday in two free concerts made possible by THE TRIBUNE. At their head is Capt. Taylor Branson, the ninth leader since the band's organization in 1800. The Chicago Stadium, 1800 W. Madison street, is the scene of both concerts.

The batons of famous bandmasters have wielded power over the brasses, the woodwinds, thundering basses, and drum units played by the scarlet, blue, and gold uniformed musicians. John Philip Sousa, America's "March King," directed this band as far back as 1882.

Branson Is American Born.

Capt. Branson is the first leader entirely the product of America, having been born in Washington of a Maryland born father and a mother from Virginia. His immediate predecessor was Capt. William H. Santelmann, who wielded the baton for twenty-nine years before he surrendered it to Capt. Branson in April, 1927.

Before Santelmann, the Marines were directed by Sousa and six other leaders, Tyre, Pons, Scala, Fries, Schneider and Fanciulli. There are few institutions in the country aside from the state and federal government that are as venerable as the United States marine band. Its inception really dates back to a transition from the original fife and drum corps which carried on its drums in 1775 the motto, "Don't Tread on Me." This appears on the drums of the present band.

Concert for School Pupils.

The Chicago concerts will be held at 2 p. m. and 8 p. m. School children will be dismissed from classes for the afternoon entertainment, both Supt. Bogan of the public schools and Father Cunningham of the parochial schools giving their approval to the plan of allowing all children interested in music the opportunity of hearing the foremost military band in the United States.

During their concert the children will hear two of the band's famous soloists, Winfred Kemp, cornetist, and Wilbur D. Kieffer, xylophonist. Bandsman Kemp will play the solo part of Bach's arrangement of the "Hungarian Melodies."

Bandsman Kieffer will perform during the second half of the afternoon concert, playing "Valse Caprice," by Wieniawski, which has been found a favorite with juvenile audiences.

In the evening Capt. Branson has chosen a dignified primary program which he will augment with marches, folk music and perhaps some popular songs. For both concerts THE TRIBUNE has arranged to amplify the music in Grant park where a dozen or more large loud speakers will pour the sound out from a platform which will be erected near the Buckingham fountain. Motorists may park in the vicinity for the double pleasure of hearing the band and watching the fountain display.

Germans Vote Today; 1 Slain, 8 Dying in Riot

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Sept. 13.—On the eve of one of the most crucial reichstag elections which Germany has faced in its twelve years as a republic, political passions boiled over today. From several cities came reports of police quelling outbreaks of violence, and in Berlin a clash between Fascists and Communists resulted in one death, eight reported dying and scores injured.

Political prophets held out no hope of a majority for Chancellor Heinrich Breuning's adherents in the republic's fifth reichstag. The warmly fought campaign leads observers to predict a big increase in Fascist seats making the chancellor's program of financial reform difficult to put through.

A coalition is predicted in which the cabinet will have to depend on Nationalist support to ensure its financial plan and a continuation of Germany's foreign policy of conciliation.

Huge Poll Expected.

The campaign that wound up tonight was symptomatic of the vast interest being taken in the issues at stake. Political meetings have been attended as never before, 90 per cent of the electorate is expected to go to the polls. While specific issues grip the voters, the fundamental issue at stake is the battle between the Communists and Adolf Hittler's Fascist party which stands openly for a dictatorship. Between them stands the moderate bourgeois element whose platform stands for progressive reconstruction. The Monarchists are expected to lose some of their seats even though the former kaiser has taken a hand in their campaign by writing a special pamphlet attacking both the Communists and the Fascists.

Voting will take place tomorrow in all the German states except Württemberg and 24 different parties are scrambling for votes. It is believed that the instability of the reichstag that will result will speed the passing of a new electoral law sponsored ever since 1922 which would realign reichstag representation and cut down the number of parties to five or six.

Cabinet Faces Defeat.

The state of the parties that may result from tomorrow's poll may cause defeat of the government at an early date on any of the vital problems facing it such as the budget, taxation or relief of unemployment.

The most serious of the election clashes occurred tonight on the Schoenhauser Tor close to the communist headquarters. As the police were dispersing a group of communists a bus filled with 30 Fascists careened by and fired at random into the dense crowd. Hundreds of shots were exchanged and many arrests made.

Stop Sale of Liquor.

One of the features of tomorrow's election is that the whole nation will have to abstain from hard liquor until polls are closed. Consequently conscientious drinkers were assembled tonight in saloons and inns imbibing more than their usual quota.

What German women think today may possibly decide what Germany will do tomorrow. It is thought that their votes will determine the trend of the election, and moreover 637 women are candidates for seats. This compares with 6,471 male candidates.

An attempt to make use of the talkies for election purposes failed at one of Berlin's leading movie houses tonight when opponents of Chancellor Bruening and Dr. Julius Curtius, who appeared on the screen, let loose a flock of white mice in the audience. The screams of the feminine spectators stopped the showing of the governmental stars and the house omitted the feature in its next showing to protect its Saturday night receipts.

TWO CAPTURED AS POLICE TRAIL PLOT COLLECTOR

Congressman Places Money Bait.

A band of extortionists, posing as professional killers hired to assassinate Oscar De Priest, Negro congressman from the First Illinois district, were trapped yesterday in a plot to wring $10,000 from De Priest in exchange for his life.

Two of the conspirators are in custody and a third is being hunted. One prisoner, Solly Lason, 25 years old, 3747 Lake Park avenue, a milk truck driver, has made a full confession. The other, Julius J. Link, 28 years old, minor political figure in De Priest's district, was seized when police raided his home on a search warrant. He has refused to talk, police say.

Send Threat in Letter.

The plotters announced their purpose in a special delivery letter received by the congressman last Monday morning at his office, 3439 South State street. The text of the message, crudely printed on cheap paper, was as follows:

"Hon. Oscar De Priest: We come to Chicago with the avowed purpose of assassinating you. We have been well paid for this mission. However, having no personal grevivance against you, we have decided to play the middle against both ends. We are to receive $5,000 at the conclusion of the job.

"In exchange for your life and documentary and other evidence against certain high officials in Washington and Alabama, we demand from you ten thousand dollars; now we know you have it and we demand it without fail.

Threatened with Death.

"Show this letter to no one; positively tell no one about it; if our plan fails thru any act of yours and causes us to lose the money [sic] promised us for killing you, nothing on earth will save you no matter how much wealth or influence you may have.

"The first thing we demand is to place an ad in the personal column of the Daily News as follows: 'I agree to your proposition, [signed] O. D. P.' Another thing: Have ready for instant delivery personally a package containing ten thousand dollars in five, ten and twenty dollar denominations.

"If you notify any agency, police, department of justice or the secret service, it will only react as a steam shovel for your grave. You are not wanted in Washington.—Brooklyn Rats."

Send Second Warning.

Beyond conferring with his bodyguard, John L. Hawkins, a Negro and former policeman, De Priest took no action on Monday. At Hawkins' advice, he took the letter, Tuesday, to Col. Robert Isham Randolph, president of the Association of Commerce and chairman of the socalled Secret Six. Col. Randolph referred the congressman to Walter Walker, attorney for the Employers' association.

While Walker was considering how to bait a trap, the extortionists on Wednesday sent De Priest the following telegram:

"The B. R. [Brooklyn Rats] brook no interference of their demands. Give one more day of grace. Arrange to have ad in two days News without fail. B. R."

On Thursday and again on Friday, the advertisement appeared. Friday afternoon a letter of instructions was delivered to the congressman's office.

Finds Further Instructions.

In accordance with the instructions, De Priest, accompanied by his bodyguard and a Negro policeman in plain clothes, walked to the Wood street station of the Douglas Park elevated line and in the lavatory found a match box, within which were further directions on a wadded sheet of paper.

While Attorney Walker and the detective bureau squad of Lieut. Andrew Barry lurked in the offing, De Priest, still accompanied by the policeman and bodyguard, walked three blocks west to a ramp at 17th and Wood streets, leading to the elevated tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio.

His bodyguard and the policeman hid in a box car and De Priest, carrying a cigar box containing $200 in marked money, proceeded alone. In accordance with the match box directions, he found a shanty on which a huge X was chalked. The shanty was locked, but an aperture had been sawed in the door and there De Priest dropped the cigar box.

Moving Time Means New Furniture Time

Furniture movers' telephones are busy these days. They're being dated up for October first.

There's no better time than just before moving day to check up home equipment and see what is needed. Possibly the dining room suite, while still useful, doesn't look as handsome as you'd like. Maybe the youngsters have grown until they're big enough to have rooms of their own. Also a new davenport may work wonders in the appearance of the living room.

It's a waste of time, effort and money to move furniture that will have to be replaced in a few months.

Now is a good time to look over your home furnishings with a critical eye, see what must be replaced, and then study the remarkable values in the new designs which Chicago department and furniture stores are displaying.

withdrew and Lieut. Barry's squad took up a vigil which continued until 10 a. m. yesterday, when Lason, driving a truck of the Capital Dairy company, unlocked the shanty, picked up the cigar box, and departed, followed at a distance by the squad car.

As the dairy truck moved south in Wood street the squadmen saw a sedan draw alongside. Lason alighted from the truck, conferred a moment with three occupants of the sedan, and drove on.

The squad men dropped the trail and, speeding to headquarters, discovered that the sedan license had been issued to Link. Within an hour they had obtained from Chief Justice Olson of the Municipal court a warrant to search Link's home.

Link's Home Raided.

The raid was staged before noon. Link was seized and a quantity of liquor, two sawed off shotguns and a pistol in the house were confiscated. Meanwhile the truck driver had been arrested upon his arrival at the milk depot at 43d street and Wabash avenue.

In his confession Lason is reported to have said that Link, whom he had known many years, approached him several weeks ago with a scheme to "trim" the congressman for $10,000, the loot to be divided equally three ways. A third accomplice, he said, was Joseph Gladstone, for whom police are seeking.

SPEED RACKET QUIZ

Indictments in the racketeering investigation ordered by Chief Justice John P. McGoorty in a special charge to the grand jury will be voted speedily if State's Attorney Swanson approves a plan outlined yesterday by his assistant, Charles J. Mueller. The latter fresh from his victory in the Elmer P. Langguth-Miss Laverne Lindgren bank fraud case, appeared early at his office yesterday to plan his activity for next week.

"I will consult with my superior, Mr. Swanson Monday morning, and ask for sufficient help and financial assistance to make this a real investigation," said Prosecutor Mueller. "I also want assurance that the investigation will be put completely in the hands of Mr. Lounsbury and myself. Too many cooks usually spoil the broth.

"Of course I welcome aid from outside agencies and shall seek a conference as soon as possible with Col. A. A. Sprague of the Association of Commerce committee. We expect him to help us materially in getting the business men of this community to stand up and give the evidence within their knowledge of racketeering."

BUFFALO FEARS CAPONE

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 13.—[U. P.]—Reports that "Scarface Al" Capone had cast an eye toward Buffalo as part of a scheme to combine the rackets of all large cities under himself were published today by the Buffalo Times.

Capone, the newspaper said, already has sent advance agents here preparatory to organizing the gambling business. One of the agents, according to the Times, was "Lefty" Clark, millionaire leader of the Purple gang of Detroit, who checked out of a local hotel recently when detectives sought him for questioning.

Publication of the reports followed the revelation yesterday that William Shisler, 24 years old, of Bridgeburg, Ont., had been kidnaped and held prisoner in Buffalo for four days, after which he was thrown, bound, into the Buffalo harbor to drown. He managed to free himself and was assisted to shore. Shisler, it is reported, formerly was associated with James Sulvani, Bridgeburg, Ont., liquor exporter.

The Capone representatives, according to the Times, are making their headquarters in a roadhouse at Tonawanda. Capone, the Times said, may seek control of alien, rum, and narcotic smuggling in this territory.

Heavy expenditures have been made on the Tonawanda roadhouse gambling palace, the Times said, but when Buffalo police threatened raids the gambling tables were not brought into use and the place was operated as a night club.

Buffalo police say they are prepared to drive Capone from the city, the paper says.

BARRY JAILED AS JUDGE LYLE REVOKES BOND

Joins Kissane in Cell to Await Vagrancy Trial.

John (West Side) Barry, labor racketeer, joined his co-defendant, Anthony (Red) Kissane in the police lockup yesterday when Judge John H. Lyle revoked his $30,000 bond. This was Judge Lyle's last judicial act in so far as the Town Hall branch of the court is concerned as he will begin his new assignment as presiding judge of the felony court tomorrow.

Barry and Kissane are held on vagrancy charges and they have demanded a jury trial rather than take a chance before Judge Lyle. It was City Prosecutor Paul Pomeroy, who started the fireworks at yesterday's session when he objected because the same piece of property was scheduled as surety on the two complaints against Barry. He is charged with disorderly conduct in addition to the vagrancy complaint.

Sister Attempts Protest.

Mrs. Helen Menard, 1957 Washington boulevard, sister of Barry signed the bonds and she stepped forward to protest the remarks of Prosecutor Pomeroy.

"I don't care to hear from you," Judge Lyle said to Mrs. Menard when she started to protest. "The bond is revoked and Barry can join his pal Kissane back in the lockup."

Judge Lyle then read a letter he had received which was signed "Members of the Newspaper Drivers' Union, Local 706," declaring that Barry forced his way into the union as secretary by the use of revolvers and hoodlums. The anonymous letter described how Fred Wicker, candidate for reelection, was intimidated and Barry elected. Barry, after his election, so the letter says, purchased a new Cadillac automobile.

Questions Kissane on Lingle.

"I understand that you are a brave man and were supposed to be the bodyguard to Lingle," Judge Lyle said to Kissane. "I wonder if you know anything about the killing of Lingle?"

Kissane was silent for a few moments and then said that he was in court when Lingle was slain and that "anyway, I wasn't his bodyguard."

Attorney John Johntry for Barry volunteered to post a cash bond to keep his client out of jail.

"The purpose of a bond is to have some reputable citizen step up and say, 'I know these men and I will vouch for them,'" said Judge Lyle. "On the back of the complaint in this case I wrote a notation specifying that real estate bonds are necessary.

"Gangsters go about armed with ready cash. That is their weapon. I have stopped cash bonds in all these cases and demand real estate bonds, and real estate must be scheduled."

An effort to release Kissane on a bond offered by John J. Purcell, 3251 Ogden avenue, a contractor, and Samuel E. Salk, 106 South Parkside avenue, a dress merchant, failed when Judge Lyle ordered an investigation as to the sufficiency of the realty offered. The property, according to the owners, is worth $76,000.

SHOT IN ROW OVER FENCE.

In an argument over a fence he was building, Walter Sicora, 22 years old, 1714 West 19th street, was shot and slightly wounded in the cheek yesterday by Michael Saltyes, 17 years, 2127 West 19th street, who escaped. Sicora was treated at the County hospital and returned home.

Who lives at The Shoreland and Why?
Shoreland standards brought Chicago a new note in Hotel aristocracy. With the opening of its doors, Chicagoans of note made this hotel their home.
Now Hotel Shoreland is part of Modern Chicago's tradition. To people of affairs its character and distinction need no introduction. Its social standing is reflected in the columns of every newspaper. Its fine clientele evidences its prestige.
And yet . . . this universal recognition, this social prominence, the exactingly high standards of service in every department . . . have imposed on us a penalty in the minds of many who keep step with Chicago's progress. The public assumed we made this Chicago's most expensive residential hotel—as well as Chicago's finest! Many have allowed price, rather than value, to determine their viewpoint.
Consider value—and you will see Economy in Shoreland living. Consider service, the staff of trained servants . . . yours to command. Consider the ease, the prestige, the charm of Shoreland living. The beauty and accessibility of its Lake-and-Park location . . . private as a country estate, yet only 10 minutes from the city-center.

GIRL QUESTIONED IN JOYCE POISON DEATH INQUIRY

Secrecy Veils Investigation by Prosecutors.

Miss Isabelle Daly, foster daughter of the late State Senator John T. Joyce, who died of hydrocyanic poisoning, according to the finding of a coroner's jury, was secretly taken into custody yesterday by the state's attorney's office.

Through the detention of Miss Daly, at least for the time being, and the questioning for several days of Jennie Boyd, colored maid in the Joyce home, it became known that the prosecutor's staff has been conducting an undercover investigation of the death of the Forty-second ward politician.

Miss Daly was reported to have been taken to a secret place to be questioned by Assistant State's Attorneys George Lavin and Ross Lee Laird. She was not taken to the state's attorney's office.

Girl Not Under Suspicion.

It was made plain by those in authority that there is no suspicion that Miss Daly had any direct knowledge of the death of her foster father. It was said that she was wanted only for questioning about certain information which has reached the prosecutor's office.

Detective Sergeant Michael Ahern of the state's attorney's staff went to the Joyce home at 207 East Chestnut street yesterday morning with a forthwith subpoena, it was learned.

Miss Daly was not at home when the detective arrived and it was reported that she was with Mrs. Mary Joyce, the widow of the senator, at a children's picnic in Lincoln park. When the detective arrived there, however, it is reported that she was not to be found.

Taken from Home by Police.

Mrs. Joyce objected to the prosecutor's office taking the young woman even for questioning, according to reports, and refused to allow Sergt. Ahern admission to her home on his second visit. A uniformed policeman from the Chicago avenue station was called. He broke past the barricade and the subpoena was served on Miss Daly. She was taken to some secret destination by the detectives, who were accompanied by Prosecutors Lavin and Laird.

The fact that the colored maid was held incommunicado for several days became known through a writ of habeas corpus.

The writ was filed before Judge E. I. Frankhauser in the Criminal court by Attorney Cornelius Palmer, who also represents Mrs. Joyce's interests. Prosecutor Lavin reported to the judge that Miss Boyd had been dismissed from custody and that there was no necessity for the writ. It was then dismissed. The prosecutor refused to say why Miss Boyd was questioned.

Widow Accuses Political Foes.

Joyce was found dead in bed on Aug. 16. The widow promptly announced that she was certain he had been murdered by political enemies. She said that her husband went to bed at an unusually early hour the previous night. She was awakened about 12:30 o'clock in the morning by a telephone call, she said, and after answering the call she went to another room to sleep. It was soon thereafter that a moan came from Joyce's room and he was found dead.

"And one thing I want to say emphatically is that John Joyce did not kill himself," was the statement attributed to Mrs. Joyce after the coroner reported the result of his findings.

Mrs. Joyce announced that at her request Dr. William D. McNally, toxicologist of the health department and former coroner's chemist, whom she retained to conduct an independent investigation of the senator's death, would exhume his body some time this week and perform a new postmortem examination.

GANG LOOTS DRESS SHOP.

Dresses valued at $2,000 were taken yesterday by four men in an automobile who held up the women's wear shop of Henry Stein at 2117 West 22d street.

EXAMINATION CALLED FOR POLICE OPERATOR POST LEFT BY REED

An examination for the position of assistant chief police operator, which has been held for the last sixty days by John P. Reed under a temporary appointment, was called yesterday by the civil service commission for Oct. 10. Reed, whose appointment was protested by the Citizens' association because of his connection with a police pension fund scandal, was not reappointed yesterday at the expiration of his term and is no longer carried on the police rolls.

An original entrance as well as a promotional examination will be held for the position, which pays $2,600 a year. This will afford Reed, a protégé of Building Commissioner Paschen, an opportunity to compete with the regular police operators for the executive position.

REPORT CAPTURE OF RED FORSYTHE, LINGLE SUSPECT

Prosecutors Refuse to Discuss Rumor.

$55,725 IN REWARDS.

Rewards totaling $55,725 are offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the slayer of Alfred Lingle. Of the $25,000 reward offered by The Tribune $10,000 will be paid to any person who will give confidential information identifying the slayer of Lingle. All information should be sent to the headquarters established by State's Attorney Swanson in room 503 Temple building, 77 West Washington street. Telephone State 3729.

Reports were current about the state's attorney's office yesterday that James [Red] Forsythe, sought in connection with the murder of Alfred Lingle since the day of that crime, June 9, is in custody.

The reports were that Forsythe had been taken into custody by Pat Roche, chief investigator for State's Attorney Swanson, and that for several days the prisoner has been subjected to questioning in an outlying hotel.

Prosecutors Are Silent.

Mr. Roche and Special Assistant State's Attorneys Charles F. Rathbun and James E. McShane, all of whom have been working to unravel the mystery of Lingle's death, refused to comment on the reports. They have not been in their regular offices at 77 West Washington street for more than a few minutes during the last several days, and this gave credence to the report that they are working secretly on some important development in the case.

During the early part of the week a lawyer notified the prosecutors that he would surrender Forsythe within 24 hours, but when the lawyer's plans were revealed by him to the newspapers the deal fell through. The lawyer asserted that his telephone wires had been tapped and that a police squad car had been posted outside his home.

No Strings on Surrender.

Mr. Roche notified the lawyer that no strings would be attached to Forsythe's surrender. An attempt had been made to obtain promises from the state that Forsythe would be released within 24 hours of his surrender, that he would not be molested, and that he would not be taken before Judge John H. Lyle, whose speedy justice to gangsters taken before him under vagrancy charges has brought fear to the gangster mind.

The reports as circulated yesterday were to the effect that Forsythe had not turned out to be such an important witness as was at first believed. The first information received by the police and prosecutors, within a day after Lingle was killed, was that Forsythe had fired the shot.

Reported Slayer at First.

One high police official said he had received information through a stool pigeon that if Forsythe was arrested, and shown to the witnesses of the Lingle killing, he would be positively identified as the actual killer.

TAXPAYERS MAKE COMPLAINTS

County Clerk Robert M. Sweitzer (right) showing County Judge Jarecki bills of objection to taxes filed yesterday by property owners before deadline for filing complaints was passed. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

File Protests

Several thousand taxpayers swarmed into the county building yesterday in a last minute rush to file objections to the 1928 real estate tax bills. At noon County Judge Jarecki entered a blanket order authorizing the sale of all 1928 tax bills against which objections have not been filed. The sale will start tomorrow in the county building.

At the end of the filing time tax officials estimated that about 6,500 objections had been entered in the County court. The number of pieces of property involved in their objections could not be estimated because any number of property owners making a common objection were permitted to join in filing one objection. One objection filed embraced 7,000 parcels of property.

More than 300,000 pieces of Cook county real estate have been listed as delinquent. This is approximately one-fourth of the total parcels of taxable property in the county and involves $40,000,000 in taxes.

The sale of tax bills is theoretically a public auction. Professional tax buyers bid for the bills. The property owners are given two years in which to redeem their realty by paying the tax bill and interest at the rate of 12 per cent for each six months.

County Attorney Hayden Bell said that the number of objections filed this year is the largest in the history of the county. He gave it as his opinion, however, that more than one-half of the delinquent taxpayers are in default because of inability to pay their bills.

Hearings on the objections will not be started for at least three weeks, Judge Jarecki said, since it will take the clerical staff some time to classify the objections.

Coincident with the start of the public auction tomorrow, Superior Judge Gentzel will rule on a demurrer to the first injunction suit against the collection of 1928 taxes. The suit was brought by Fred Kinderman, Oak Park real estate dealer.

FLEEING RUSSIAN PEASANTS SLAIN BY OWN TROOPS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

VILNA, Sept. 13.—One hundred-fifty Russian peasants attempted to escape into Poland over the Polish frontier near Slobuszowo this morning. When 40 yards from the Polish outposts they were fired upon by a group of soviet guards with machine guns. After killing a large number of the peasants, the Russian guards dragged the remainder, including women and children, back into soviet territory. Polish soldiers witnessed the tragedy from their side of the frontier but were unable to assist the victims.

BRITAIN INDUCES FRANCE AND ITALY TO END NAVY ROW

Report New Agreement Approved by Mussolini.

Diplomatic Chessboard

Dispatches from Geneva and London last night revealed interesting diplomatic moves which may either heal the threatened breach between France and Italy or further complicate a situation which many observers have recently looked on as ominous. Summarized, these dispatches said:

GENEVA—France and Italy near accord.

LONDON—British and Italians reach entente on naval matters.

BY HENRY WALES.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

GENEVA, Sept. 13.—Acquiescing to the British ultimatum delivered by Foreign Secretary Arthur Henderson last Thursday, the French and Italians are reported tonight to be on the verge of a complete accord on their differences over relative naval strength, which prevented a complete agreement at the London naval conference.

Although official circles profess ignorance of the fact, it is understood that it is extremely likely that Dino Grandi, Italian foreign minister, will return to Geneva to take his place in the league of nations council on Wednesday, and that he will carry in his pocket a rough draft, already approved by Premier Mussolini, forming a basis for a naval agreement.

The spokesman of the Italian delegation tonight denied that an agreement had been reached to extend the Franco-Italian naval holiday indefinitely, as reported in some circles here, but he said the conversations with the French during the last few days had been marked with a much brighter atmosphere.

It is believed that the possibility of an accord between France and Italy comes as a result of conversation between First Lord of the British Admiralty A. V. Alexander and Sig. Grandi, in which Mr. Alexander is reported to have assured Italy that she will not suffer from a reduction in her fleet in the Mediterranean, and following Mr. Alexander's conversations with the French naval minister, Jacques-Louis Dumesnil, yesterday.

BRITISH-ITALIAN PACT

BY JOHN STEELE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Sept. 13.—A close entente has been established between Great Britain and Italy as a result of the recent visit to Rome by A. V. Alexander, first lord of the British admiralty, and the French are reported to be much worried about their gradual isolation.

British opinion has been hardening against the French policy, which, it is believed by the British, prevents real disarmament, and Italy has also been annoyed by the French plans for increasing her naval force in the Mediterranean.

This program, it is alleged, forces Italy to increase her own building program and practically nullifies much of the saving obtained at the recent naval conference in London.

U. S. Is Affected.

The French policy reacts on the United States, also, for if France goes on building, Great Britain will be forced to increase her program, and the United States will then also be forced to increase her building in order to maintain parity with Great Britain.

Italy, however, is trying to avoid an increase by seeking security through a British entente and much progress has been made in that direction during the conversations between Dino Grandi, Italian foreign minister, and Mr. Alexander, who formed a close friendship at the London conference.

What Entente Provides For.

Mr. Alexander, it is said, was definitely charged by Prime Minister MacDonald to find out what assurances would satisfy Italy and it is reported that the formula is an assurance from Great Britain to Italy that the latter's position in the Mediterranean would not be weakened by an increase in French building. Italy, in turn, is supposed to have promised to adopt a milder foreign policy in some respects and to coöperate more closely with the league of nations.

It is also reported that Rumania has been won from the French influence to the new Anglo-Italian group as a result of Great Britain's agreement to take almost the entire Rumanian output of oil. Part of this oil is to be used for the British Mediterranean fleet and the rest will be bought by British oil companies. This will solve the Rumanian budget difficulties by providing a regular annual income.

In return, Rumania is said to have agreed to place a share of new naval contracts with British yards and British firms are also to get a contract for the construction of a new Rumanian dock yard on the Black sea.

Italy also agrees to give British shipping a greater share than it has been having of the Italian carrying trade, especially in coal, and in the political field she agrees to use her influence in behalf of British interests in Turkey and Persia, where Italian diplomacy has been successful.

In spite of this growing entente with Italy, Arthur Henderson, British foreign secretary, has been trying his hardest to preserve good relations with France and it is reported that he tried some time ago to get France and Italy together to discuss points of friction between them.

The French replied that they are willing to be friends, but would do nothing to weaken their obligations to Jugo-Slavia. As the Jugo-Slavian-Italian relations are bad, that ended the discussions for the time being.

GIRL SECRETARY GETS 'WINGS'

MISS ROSE LAUDER.

First in Lake Forest

Miss Rose Lauder, 21 years old, 1190 Edgewood road, Lake Forest, became Lake Forest's first licensed aviatrix yesterday when she received from the department of commerce a private pilot's license. A graduate of the University of Wisconsin, Miss Lauder became interested in aviation through her brother-in-law, Harold Ambler, at whose home she lives. Mr. Ambler, a wartime flyer, architect, and designer of Sky Harbor airport, took Miss Lauder on her first flight. Enthused, she took a job as stenographer at Palwaukee airport, from which position she rose to become secretary of the airport. She plans to fly alone to Florida this winter.

Decorate U. S. Officer After War on Nicaragua Rebels

BLUEFIELDS, Nicaragua, Sept. 13.—(AP)—Lieut. Chester Arthur Davis, Nicaraguan National Guard, was decorated today with the navy cross for gallantry in action against Nicaraguan insurgents in the northern area last year. Davis' home is in Boston. He served overseas in the second division, A. E. F., where he was decorated several times for valor. He also has the distinguished service cross.

BRITISH DEMAND TARIFF TRUCE; THREATEN 'WAR'

May Scrap Free Trade Policies, League Warned

BY HENRY WALES.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

GENEVA, Sept. 13.—The unmistakable threat that the British Labor government would abandon the traditional free trade policies and engage in tariff reprisals unless her continental neighbors agreed to a customs truce was voiced in the league assembly today by William Graham, president of the British board of trade.

Deploring the failure of the eighteen nations which signed the convention for the abolition of customs barriers to live up to the sentiments expressed at the Geneva conference, Mr. Graham urged the signatory powers to get together in November and apply the convention immediately.

Ready to Quit.

He reminded his colleagues of the privilege accorded the signatory powers under the convention of giving notice of withdrawal by Feb. 1, 1931, and indicated that the British government would exercise this prerogative unless the other nations manifested greater coöperation.

Mr. Graham gave them to understand that the world economic depression and the virtual tariff war going on between America and various European countries made it impossible for the British to maintain their traditional policy.

He asserted that protectionism is a false remedy for industrial depression. While not expressing much hope for a comprehensive tariff reduction, he suggested that the nations might make progress by concentrating on certain categories such as textiles and machinery.

An agreement was reached today, it is understood, to refer Aristide Briand's federation of European states to the sixth committee, instead of a special committee, answerable directly to the league as the French wanted. In return the French foreign minister is given a seat on this committee.

Concede Kellogg's Selection.

The naming of a successor to Charles Evans Hughes for the regular term of the world court will be a matter of chief interest next week. It is generally conceded that Frank B. Kellogg will succeed Mr. Hughes. The election will be held at a later date.

The struggle between China and the Irish Free State for a seat at the league council table was opened today, when the Nanking delegation announced it would file a proposal to make China eligible for reëlection next week. Its tenure of office expired two years ago.

The dull meeting of the assembly was somewhat livened up by an incident occurring this morning while Dr. Giuseppe Motta, the Swiss delegate, was talking. Dr. Motta was elaborating upon the necessity of disarmament security when the boom of drums and the blare of martial music penetrated the assembly hall. It was a detachment of the Swiss infantry in olive uniforms and steel helmets returning from extensive maneuvers along the French border calculated to work out a plan of defense against any army attempting to invade Switzerland from the west.

Seize White Man on Charge of Attempt to Kill Negro

Eastmen, Ga., Sept. 13.—(AP)—George Jump, 43 year old farmer, was arrested here today on a warrant charging assault with intent to commit murder in connection with an attempt made early yesterday to lynch M. C. Wylie, Negro, held as a suspect in connection with an attack on the wife of a farmer near here a few weeks ago.

HOLD UP HYDE PARK CLUB.

Two bandits yesterday held up William Collins, night clerk, and Joseph Parsley, elevator boy, of the Beach View club, 1745 East 53d street, obtaining $80.

CHICAGOANS VISIT MUSSOLINI; HEAR HIM PRAISE U. S.

ROME, Sept. 13.—(AP)—Fifty Italian-Americans, most of them from Chicago, were received by Premier Mussolini today. They presented to Il Duce a check for $5,000 as a gift of the Italian-American National union, and a check for $250 and $500 in bonds as the gift of the Garibaldi Legion. Other societies represented in the delegation were the Association of Italian Combatants, and the St. Paul, Minn., society.

Premier Mussolini expressed his admiration for the United States and urged the visitors to show the utmost loyalty toward America. He asked them, however, to make known the truth about Italy, which, he said, is often misrepresented by anti-Italians. He consigned their offerings to the "Sons of Littorio" for the benefit of the rising generation.

Some members of the delegation later were received by Pope Pius.

CHARGES OLD CAR INVESTORS LOSE BY MERGER PLAN

Critic Says They Should Get All New Securities.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

William Hughes Clarke, a critic of the transportation franchise approved in the July 1 referendum, is an opponent of the tentative plan of Halsey, Stuart & Co. to consolidate the surface and elevated lines.

The probable friends of the proposed plan have declined so far to make any comment on the financing proposals, explaining that they desire to study it thoroughly before expressing their views. The plan was first made public last Monday. Before this week is over the adherents to the plan either in its present or a modified form will probably give their opinions.

Clarke Criticizes Program.

Mr. Clarke says it is "ridiculous and constitutes a tragic departure from Chicago's ambitions for investment integrity to offer investors half bonds and half stock for the $850 and $900 due on their first mortgages."

He continues: "If surface lines' first mortgage bonds are allowed by those who recommended them in the beginning as first mortgages to degenerate into only half bonds and half stock at the end, then it will be hopeless to expect that intelligent institutions and individuals will ever invest any more money in our traction utilities.

"And at the tail end of the plan it is equally unwise to divide the common stock into $25 shares, for the purpose of giving four votes to each $100 of the final fourth layer equity stock of questionable value and doubtful earning power, as compared with only one vote for each $100 of money that is fully represented by tangible property or cash."

His View of New Securities.

Mr. Clarke in other comments makes these two observations:

"Every dollar of the new bonds and new stocks issuable pursuant to the comprehensive unified ordinance for the old properties to be transferred by the old investors to the new local transportation merger belongs by right and must all be allocated exclusively to the old bond creditor and stockholding investors.

"On May 19 the Continental-Illinois Bank and Trust company, the First Trust and Savings bank, Halsey, Stuart & Co. and the Harris Trust and Savings bank jointly promised the city council to underwrite or purchase $25,000,000 new securities as an inducement for the aldermen to pass the ordinance."

Criticism Aimed at Bankers.

Then Mr. Clarke makes his charges in this form: "According to the plan promulgated by Halsey, Stuart & Co. Messrs. Harris, Reynolds, Stuart, and Traylor, constituting the advisory committee selected by Mr. Insull, propose:

"A. To gouge off their banking companies $2,650,315 of second preference series A $6 preferred, $2,053,024 third preference class A $6 convertible common, and $14,530,627 final fourth layer class B common, out of the securities issuable for and intended to be exchanged for the old properties now owned by the old investors.

"B. To distribute these $19,233,966 stocks as bonus, free of cost, inducement trimmings to any investors who, by the way of the warrants may purchase at par from the banks the $25,000,000 prior $7 preferred stock, which the banks promised to underwrite.

Charges $19,000,000 Sugar.

"The plain facts are the advisory bankers' committee would assess and take away from the old bondholders and old stockholders more than $19,000,000 in stocks—over 10 per cent of the total stocks to all of which the old investors alone are entitled—for the purpose of making it easier for these bankers to bale out their banks from the underwriting promise to the city council.

"And this same prior $7 preferred, which the bankers feel needs sweetening by a 76 per cent bonus of assorted junior stocks to make it salable at par for cash, is the same prior $7 preferred that the plan offers the bondholders for half of their first mortgage claims.

"The whole proposition is profanely stupid. Passengers, and laborers and investors alike are all tired of being trifled with.

Urges "Fair Consolidation."

"The surface lines are rich in property and cash assets, traffic earnings and surplus. The Elevated system continues to yield some surplus above its bond interest, and its traffic and earnings will respond quickly to better service and operating economies, just as soon as the Rapid Transit can be relieved from extravagant drains on its physical and financial resources.

"A fair and simple consolidation can provide and support enough sound bonds and stocks, in amount and in quality and without distortions, to win enthusiastic acceptance from nearly all the present holders who can be reached, and to attract new capital."

Before the tentative financial plan was made public, Mr. Clarke forecast certain features of it which did not prove to be correct. He also urged security holders in the present companies to withold those securities from protective committees, and if they had deposited them to recall them. He has not disclosed whether he is representing any security holders or is criticizing as a public spirited citizen for the benefit of all investors and the people.

Motor Boat Explodes After Two Leap Into Lake

The motor boat Cathe, which caught fire and blew up in the lake four miles off shore yesterday.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

RESCUE SAILORS

Fifteen minutes after they leaped into Lake Michigan from the burning motor boat Cathe, four miles east of the 57th street beach yesterday afternoon, Lee Gould of 8026 Drexel avenue and Darrell Hollister, 852 East 80th street, were rescued. A few minutes after Gould and Hollister had been hauled into the speedboat Demon II., piloted by Eugene Mathis, the Cathe exploded.

Gould, owner of the Cathe, is vice president and general manager of the Heritage Coal company at 63d street and Michigan avenue. With Hollister, who heads the sales department, he had set out for a fishing trip. When the ship caught fire Gould and Hollister tossed the boat cushions into the lake for life preservers and dived. Mathis, vice president of the New York Blower company at 62d street and Shields avenue, cruising near the scene with a party of friends, noticed the smoke and went to the rescue. After the explosion not a splinter of the Cathe remained afloat.

NABS MAN, BUT HAS NO JAIL TO KEEP HIM IN

New York, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—The small town of Roseland, N. J., has no jail and apparently has no need of one. This was indicated today by the case of Samuel Marucci.

Marucci, who is 33 and lives in Roseland, was arrested by the chief of police of that town for the police of Orange, who wanted him on a bad check charge. Since there is no jail he was taken to the chief's home and locked up there.

This was all right except that the chief had other plans for the morning. He wanted to go shopping. So he telephoned Orange police headquarters and asked for instructions.

Sergt. George Gascoyne, on desk duty in Orange, received the call and heard the Roseland chief's problem, but could offer no solution. Such a problem had never arisen before in Gascoyne's career in the constabulary.

"Well, it's all right," the Roseland chief at length decided. "I know what we'll do. I'll just give the warrant to Marucci and instruct him to report to you."

Just forty-six minutes later Marucci walked into the Orange station.

SCHOOLS ARE KEY TO CRIME CURE, BOGAN DECLARES

Urges Divorce of Politics and Education.

If Chicago is to rise above the stigma of "crime ridden city" and become known as a city of culture and independence it must be done by building character as it builds skyscrapers—from the smallest piece in the foundation to the last stone in the superstructure each item must be planned and fitted.

Such was the declaration of William J. Bogan, superintendent of schools, in addressing four hundred principals yesterday at the Art institute at the first monthly meeting of the school heads. Mr. Bogan outlined his educational program—involving many departures from accepted procedure. Classified as a yearly program, this policy cannot be realized in less than a generation, he said.

Education by Generations.

"The Chicago plan commission," he stated, "has outlined a city building program that will take a hundred years to finish. Is the training of a free citizenry any the less important? We must plan education by generations."

Three points were stressed: Development of citizenship from elementary schools to maturity, with a free student and a free teacher; schools divorsed from politics; and a changing curriculum to keep pace with changing civilization.

"In the past," Mr. Bogan said, "we have retailed thoughts of ancient scholars. The student merely became a parrot. The new trend in education is to teach the student to think. A good citizen must think for himself, must understand his duties and his privileges.

"Divorce Politics and Education."

Mr. Bogan deplored the part politics have played in the schools. "Grafting politicians in Chicago have regarded the schools as a political plum," he said. "That is now being changed. We are developing a free teacher who is able to develop a free child. Politics and education have nothing in common and must be divorced."

The curriculum commission—the greatest innovation in education—has been developed in Chicago and is being studied by educational heads throughout the world, Mr. Bogan said. Working of this body, aided by a commission appointed and paid by the Union League club, was explained by the speaker.

"The outlining of a course of study years in advance is folly," he asserted. "The curriculum committee is constantly studying changing conditions and suggesting changes in our course of study to meet them. Truant schools, which have cut juvenile delinquency in half and will ultimately do much to stop crime at the source, is an illustration of their importance."

PROFESSOR OF LAW, OUT FOR GOVERNOR, IS REPORTED FIRED

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 13.—(AP)—The Bridgeport Sunday Post says that Professor Albert Levitt of Redding, independent candidate for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, has been discharged as professor of law in the Brooklyn Law school of St. Lawrence university, a position he held since 1927. He is associate editor of the Central Law Journal, St. Louis.

During his campaign for the gubernatorial nomination which gained him only three pledged delegates to the state convention, which opens in Hartford Monday, Professor Levitt frequently attacked J. Henry Roraback, state Republican chairman and national committeeman, and the present Republican administration.

Professor Levitt has taught or lectured at Columbia, Colgate, George Washington university, University of North Dakota, Johns Hopkins Medical school, and Washington and Lee.

He served with the American field hospital in the French army in 1915 and was wounded and gassed in 1918 while a chaplain in the United States army.

PARTY LEADERS BACK ROOSEVELT LIQUOR STAND

Wins Democrats from All Sections.

New York, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Members of the Democratic national committee, both men and women, throughout the country, have in the majority come out in support of Gov. Roosevelt's declaration for repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Of twenty-nine replying from twenty-three states to the question of their attitude toward the governor's stand, put by the New York Times, only five in four states were forthrightly opposed to it. Of these only one was a woman.

Thirteen men and eight women, in seventeen states, declared themselves for the Roosevelt policy on prohibition as that which should be approved by the Democratic party nationally. Three others, two women and a man, in two states, did not definitely commit themselves.

Opposition Heard From.

Two of the opposition, Oswald West of Oregon and Scott Fersis of Oklahoma, stood firmly by prohibition and insisted upon even more stringent enforcement. Watt T. Brown of Alabama warned that any attempt at repeal would be resisted.

Mrs. L. H. Jennings simply said that South Carolina was against repeal, but her colleague, Gov. John G. Richards, asserted that Gov. Roosevelt by his statement had "removed himself as a Democratic nominee for President in 1932."

On the other hand, Dudley Doolittle of Missouri predicted Democratic victory on the issue in 1932 with the party carrying the east, north, and south, though conceding that the west might cast its electoral votes for a "dry Republican candidate."

Illinois Woman for It.

Among the committeewomen backing Gov. Roosevelt was Mrs. Elizabeth A. Conkey of Illinois.

Sentiment did not appear to be centered sectionally. Committeemen supporting Gov. Roosevelt replied from Washington, Montana, Minnesota, Idaho, Illinois, Michigan, Arizona, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts.

Hasler, and her cousin, Miss Eleanor Coonley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss L. Coonley of New York and Great Barrington, Mass., were presented to society at a tea and reception in the gardens of Mrs. Hasler's residence, Aldingbourne cottage, in Lake Forest.

Miss Hasler wore a blue and white printed chiffon frock and Miss Coonley pink organdy. Mrs. Walter S. Brewster was hostess at a dinner following the tea for the two buds.

Miss Evelyn Byrd Bouscaren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis H. G. Bouscaren, made her formal bow in the flower filled drawing room of her parents' residence in Winnetka.

Another Winnetka debutante, Miss Leila Withers, received with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Allen L. Withers, at the Indian Hill country club. Mr. and Mrs. Withers gave a dinner-dance for their daughter and her assistants following the reception.

STATE AROUSED BY WET ISSUE, POLITICIANS SAY

rigid enforcement of the liquor laws. She recognizes that the liquor problem is a most important social question, but in seeking its solution she insists upon adhering to the only method which is in accordance with the laws of the state of Illinois and with the constitution of the United States.

"In an effort to make it appear that Mrs. McCormick is 'pussyfooting,' her political opponents have misquoted her speech at the Republican state convention in Springfield on Aug. 22. They represent that she has agreed to become wet if the state referendum majority is a wet majority and that she will vote for repeal of the 18th amendment if the state referendum favors that repeal.

Cites Candidate's Position.

"These assertions are, of course, untrue, and Mrs. McCormick's position is that if a majority in Illinois favor a resubmission of the prohibition question to the people of the country she, as senator, will vote to resubmit the question to the forty-eight states. In so doing she will not be voting for or against repeal, either personally or in her official capacity as a senator.

"In entering upon a hopeless race Mrs. O'Neill is proposing to split the vote in Illinois in such a way as to give all possible advantage to James Hamilton Lewis, the Democratic candidate for the senate. Pending repeal of the 18th amendment, the Democratic candidate and his party propose to nullify and violate the constitution by such specious devices as the placing of sufficient alcohol in beverages to make them intoxicating, although the constitution expressly forbids the manufacture, sale or transportation of such beverages."

The Nye committee is to resume its hearings in Chicago tomorrow. About thirty witnesses remain to be heard before the committee goes to investigate campaigns in Nebraska and Colorado, according to a Washington dispatch quoting Senator Nye. Deputy marshals were busy yesterday serving subpoenaes upon the scheduled witnesses.

DEMOCRAT WILL CAMPAIGN FOR SENATOR NORRIS

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—[U.P.]—An indication that the "Progressive group" in the senate plans to stick together, regardless of party lines, was seen today in the announcement by Senator Wheeler [Dem., Mont.], that he will leave Washington tomorrow for the west, where he will campaign for Senator Norris [Rep., Neb.].

Wheeler also will campaign for his Democratic colleague from Montana, Senator Walsh.

Wheeler said he had "no doubt" as to the outcome of Walsh's fight. He said he had received letters from a number of prominent Republicans who said they were going to vote for Walsh.

RUM REFERENDA RIDICULOUS, SAYS F. SCOTT McBRIDE

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Submission of the prohibition question to the states or to the people would be "impossible and ridiculous" from the viewpoint of the Anti-Saloon League of America as expressed today by Supt. F. Scott McBride.

Dr. McBride, discussing the recent political developments on the wet and dry issue, among them a statement by Senator Wesley L. Jones [Rep., Wash.] calling attention to the two ways of securing repeal of the 18th amendment, reaffirmed the opposition of his organization to dry law referenda.

"We'll oppose resubmission of prohibition to the states or the people," said Dr. McBride. "Any such proposal would be impossible and ridiculous. It would take a two-thirds vote of congress, and congress is now more than two to one dry. Three-fourths of the states would never ratify such an amendment."

The Anti-Saloon league leader assumed a defiant attitude toward the wets in discussing the recent primaries in which several dry favorites lost their seats. He asserted that the wet agitation will rouse the drys to greater activity and predicted that "the next congress will be as dry or drier than past congresses."

"There is no disposition on the part of the dry forces to surrender or submit to modification, repeal, or any other wet program," he said.

ARGENTINE JUNTA PROBES GRAFT OF YRIGOYEN RULE

Studies Offers of 10 Banks to Lend $50,000,000.

[Copyright: 1930: By the New York Times.]

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 13.—The minister of finance has indicated he will give preferential attention on Monday to studying ten definite loan offers from American and European bankers which have been submitted for canceling a $50,000,000 American short term loan which expires Oct. 6.

The provisional government, having completely reorganized the national administration, now is taking energetic measures to insure its functioning honestly, efficiently and expeditiously and has ordered the bureau chiefs to present the schedules and personal records of all employés before Sept. 29 to facilitate the elimination of thousands who are said to be on the pay rolls without duties and others appointed merely to give them government jobs.

Discover Huge Graft.

The military junta has found that in every government department were "auxiliary payrolls" of a large number of persons who were drawing government salaries without being required to go to their offices, except once a month to collect their salaries.

In many other offices there were many more employees than were required, in several of the offices of the state railways, for example, where the budget provides for six clerks, there were 300 or more.

Make Daily Arrests.

Numerous arrests are being made daily of high officials of the late regime who are charged with responsibility for irregularities. All former congressmen who were under arrest have been released, but they are instructed to remain where they can be found if wanted again. Señor Yrigoyen is still a prisoner aboard the cruiser Belgrano.

The government of Chile today formally recognized the provisional government of Argentina, being the first to extend diplomatic recognition. It is expected Bolivia and Peru will extend recognition early next week, followed perhaps by other South American republics.

Predicts New Upset.

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Sept. 13.—[U. P.]—Horacio Oyhanarte, foreign minister in the government of former President Yrigoyen of Argentina, arrived here today from La Plata. He said that the leaders of the new Argentine government would soon be quarreling among themselves. "We will expel them from power by violence, or by votes," he said.

Grow Arrives at Lima.

LIMA, Peru, Sept. 13.—(AP)—Lieutenant Commander Harold S. Grow, still a prisoner but expecting release momentarily, arrived here today from Arequipa on the steamer Rimac.

Deny Cuban Troubles.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Officials of the Cuban embassy today issued a formal statement denying circulated reports that a revolution was imminent in Cuba. According to embassy officials, the Machado government in cables received here today stated that peace reigns throughout Cuba and that all national activities are functioning normally.

PLEA TO EXHUME "SLAIN" JUDGE IS DENIED BY COURT

Magistrate Reported Beaten to Death.

New York, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Statements made "in a political campaign" unless supported by sworn testimony that a crime has been committed are not sufficient to justify disturbance of "the sanctity of the grave," Supreme Court Justice Ernest E. L. Hammer ruled today in denying a motion by Assistant District Attorney George N. Brothers for permission to exhume the body of the late Magistrate Andrew Macrery.

Although the ruling of the court blocked the effort of Andrew B. Keating, Tammany leader of the thirteenth assembly district to cause a reopening of investigation into the charge that the late magistrate was beaten to death for refusing to pay $30,000 for reappointment to the bench, Mr. Brothers obtained permission to renew his application if he could obtain legal evidence of foul play. District Attorney T. C. T. Crain will decide Monday whether to press the matter further, it was said.

Charge Never Sustained.

Edward V. Broderick, an attorney and an adherent of Patrick S. Dowd who is trying to wrest the leadership of the thirteenth district from Keating, was the author of the charge that Magistrate Macrery's death was connected with his refusal to pay for his reappointment. Mr. Broderick, however, did not appear to testify at the inquiry that was held by Dr. Charles Norris, chief medical examiner, and the charge never was sustained by any legal body.

The magistrate died on Aug. 21, 1929, in the office of Dr. Max Greenwald, a heart specialist, after a conference in Keating's office. At the hearing before Justice Hammer members of Magistrate Macrery's family opposed a new investigation in the absence of any new evidence.

Busy on Ewald Case.

Meanwhile, the assistants and deputies of Attorney General Ward hastened their preparation for beginning the prosecution of charges of office buying against former Magistrate George F. Ewald. The extraordinary grand jury which is to consider whether the $10,000 which passed from Mrs. Bertha E. Wald to Martin J. Healy, Tammany leader at the time of her husband's appointment, was a loan or a bribe will convene Monday.

Meanwhile the police continued their search for Justice Joseph Force Crater of the Supreme court, who has been mysteriously missing for a month or more, without any definite results.

DR. THOMPSON LAUDS ALCOCK AS POLICE HEAD

Acting Police Commissioner Alcock yesterday received a letter from Dr. John Thompson, minister of the First Methodist Episcopal church, expressing confidence in the police administration. The letter read:

"By your courtesy, permit me to encourage you by reporting that wherever I go to the various conferences I am called upon to attend I find confidence expressed in your administration. My impression is that the public is trusting you in an unusual degree.

"Personally, I cherish the kindliest feelings toward the police department, and always on Sunday night offer prayer for the police of our city. Heaven's best benedictions on you."

The commissioner yesterday expressed commendation for the work of Chief of Detectives John Norton in arresting Nick Muscato, leader of the 42 gang, who is charged with two murders. Alcock said a beginning has been made in a cleanup of the 42 gang.

KILLS 2 ROBBERS IN CAFE HOLDUP; GETS HERO PRIZE

Policeman Fires as Gunmen Search Patrons.

Three bandits, one armed with a shotgun and the other two with automatic pistols, entered a restaurant at 502 North Franklin street on the night of Aug. 15. To the dozen diners, including Policeman Edward Lynn of the detective bureau, they ordered: "Hands up! Everybody face the wall."

Lynn, who was on furlough and in civilian clothes, complied with the order while awaiting an opportunity to pull out his service revolver and go into action. Shortly the opportunity arrived and THE TRIBUNE has awarded Lynn the hero prize of $100 for August for his heroism then.

Slays Two Bandits.

When the shooting had ceased two of the bandits were lying on the floor, one dead and the other mortally wounded. The third robber had fled through a rear door, after seeing his two companions fall under Lynn's deadly fire. Lynn came through the battle unscratched.

"This heroic action has dramatized to the public the hazards a police officer encounters in protecting life and property," said Chief of Detectives John Norton. "The valor displayed by Policeman Lynn while under fire is a noble demonstration of his coolness and courage in the face of possible death."

As the robbers entered Lynn was seated at a table with a woman companion. The leader pointed his shotgun directly at Lynn and the policeman joined the other customers lined up against the wall. The leader covered the customers with his weapon while another began a search of their pockets for money. The third bandit had taken the proprietor and the waiter to a rear room to open the safe.

Draws Gun and Fires.

Three of the patrons had been relieved of their valuables when Lynn saw that it was his turn to be searched and that he must act quickly or the bandits would get his revolver. Lynn drew his weapon and fired three shots at the robber carrying the shotgun.

As the gunman fell mortally wounded he fired both barrels of his shotgun, the charge tearing a hole in the wall four inches from Lynn's side. Then the policeman turned and fired two shots at the second holdup man, dropping him to the floor. The third holdup man had already vanished.

The bandit leader was identified as Louis Kains, 19 years old, 1743 North Artesian avenue, and also as the man who shot and killed Sam Esserman in the latter's grocery store at 264 North Kedzie avenue on July 27. Esserman, according to witnesses, had been slow in complying with Kains' order to go to the rear of the store. The second dead bandit was identified as Lester Burnett, 21 years old, 1745 North Artesian avenue.

On Police Force Since 1924.

Policeman Lynn, who is 29 years old, is unmarried and lives with his parents at 1313 North Austin boulevard. He joined the police force on Dec. 31, 1924, and since then has received two creditable mentions for efficient and courageous service. For his latest deed he has been awarded $300 extra compensation and mentioned for a temporary sergeancy.

In another holdup battle Policeman John Connerton of the Irving Park station distinguished himself. Connerton was sleeping in a rear room of his father's grocery at 1119 Branch street on Aug. 20 when two robbers held up the elder Connerton. The policeman awakened and covered with his gun the bandit who was guarding his father.

As he did the second bandit emerged from behind a counter with his gun pointed at the policeman. Connerton fired, striking this gunman in the face and dropping him to the floor and then fatally wounded the other robber, who had started to flee through the door. The two were identified as having committed six robberies.

RETURN OF HEAT ADDS TO TRIBUNE ICE FUND CALLS

Your Help Is Needed by Tenement Babies.

BY KATHERINE KELLEY.

With the return of summer heat yesterday, tenement folks eyed their calendars and figured that September might have plenty of days of misery and heat for poor folks. They recalled, too, the September of three years ago, when hot, breathless days sapped the strength of mothers and babies.

Hot weather means renewed effort among TRIBUNE readers to see that tenement families are supplied with ice. All summer, even during pleasantly comfortable August, THE TRIBUNE ice wagons left generous chunks of ice. In this way, disease was prevented and lives saved, for baby's milk was kept fresh and cool, and vegetables crisp and palatable for the whole family.

Readers Are Generous.

Vacations may be over and children back in school, and life may be looking up a bit with hope of a fall job for a father or mother. But as long as ice is needed in tenement households it will be provided through THE TRIBUNE'S free ice fund. Readers have been generous, and loyal ice fund boosters will continue to see that there is enough money to provide ice until cool weather is here to stay.

While on the subject, here is a reminder that vacations for mothers and children at Camp Algonquin, THE TRIBUNE'S Fox river valley camp, may have come to an end last week, but their expenses aren't so easily terminated. Any head of a household knows what it costs to feed a family of hungry mouths three times a day, pay their laundry bills, and give them a bit of recreation. And when the mathematically inclined multiply that cost by several hundred they will have a total running into the thousands of dollars.

Camp Fund Needs Gifts.

With the Camp Algonquin fund far below what it should be, it is necessary to ask TRIBUNE readers to contribute. Not one of those mothers and children who were promised vacations was disappointed. The camp was open from the middle of June to last Thursday—three months of happy vacation days during which hundreds experienced their first visit to a summer camp.

For the first time in years many mothers were relieved of the care of their children, and watched their babies grow rosy-cheeked in the nursery, and the older ones brown and healthy in their outdoor play directed by counselors. Then there was that group of 200 undernourished boys and girls under 14 years who stayed all summer and rebuilt their bodies and gained until their parents hardly knew them when they came back to Chicago just in time to enter school.

For the ice fund yesterday came a gift of $15 from Frank J. Loesch, and $1, the proceeds of a golf course built in their own back yard, from H. Knox Bettinghus and Richard Neukranz. This makes the ice fund total $3,379.65.

A gift of $4 from E. W. and G. W. brought the Camp Algonquin fund to $3,512.57. All gifts should be made payable to the cashier of THE TRIBUNE.

THIRTY SEIZED, DOPE FOUND IN SERIES OF RAIDS

Young Women Arrested at Apartments.

About thirty prisoners were rounded up by federal narcotic agents and detective bureau squads in a series of raids yesterday afternoon, including one at the Surf Ridge apartment building, 555-557 Surf street, where eleven persons were arrested.

Several young women prisoners were taken in the raids in three apartments at the Surf Ridge. They were clad in silk pajamas in company with young men and large quantities of opium and paraphernalia for smoking it were found, the squads reported.

Those arrested there gave their names as Mrs. Dorothy O'Brien, Marie Rummer, Regina Karr, Mr. and Mrs. John Mortimer, William Bosen, Phillip Glinky, Sidney Stearn, Mrs. Margaret O'Hara, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stockdale.

Former Beauty Winner.

Mrs. O'Hara said she won a beauty contest in 1927 at Miami Beach, Fla. Stockdale was described by the raiders as a minor racketeer from Kansas City.

Eight other prisoners were taken at the Lurbana hotel, 1232 North La Salle street, including one Ike Kaufman, said to be a dope peddler. Another raid was conducted at a rooming house at 59 East Ontario street.

The prisoners were taken to the Transportation building and questioned by H. D. Westover, narcotic agent in charge.

Prisoners Viewed by Rathbun.

Assistant State's Attorney Rathbun and Chief Investigator Roche looked the prisoners over on the possibility that some of them might be suspects wanted in the Lingle murder investigation, but Roche said later that none of them were wanted in connection with that crime.

Search warrants and warrants for arrest were issued by United States Commissioner Walker.

GIRL, 5, KILLED IN GUN ACCIDENT.

Anderson, Ind., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Betty Jane Ulmer, 5, Chesterfield, was accidentally shot and killed by Lloyd Stanley, 11, Chesterfield, while the boy was shooting a .22 caliber rifle at blackbirds near the homes of the children.

INDIA VICEROY'S CABINET O. K.'S REFORM SCHEME

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Sept. 13.—The cabinet of Lord Irwin, Indian viceroy, which had not been altogether behind him in his approaches to Gandhi, was reported here today to be now united in favor of a scheme of reform which follows closely that of the Indian princes cabled to THE TRIBUNE yesterday.

The chief points of this scheme are a dominion constitution with safeguards for a transitional period, financial control to be Indianized completely within a definite period, but with the viceroy to have a veto on the budget for safeguarded departments, a central government to be carried on by a prime minister and cabinet selected from the largest party in parliament, and British trade and financial interests to be safeguarded from discrimination.

Lindy and Anne Off on Flight in Anne's Plane

Hicksville, N. Y., Sept. 13.—[U. P.]—Col. Charles Lindbergh and his wife left the Long Island Country club here late today in their new bird biplane for an unannounced destination. During the day Col. Lindbergh was observed giving Mrs. Lindbergh instructions, and it is thought that during the trip she will relieve him at the controls.

STATE JUSTICES CLEAR CRIMINAL LAW OF COBWEBS

Supreme Court Acts as Liberalizing Force.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

The Supreme Court of Illinois has become a new liberalizing and constructive force, particularly in the administration of criminal law, during the last few years.

Its most recent decision, which gives the defendant in a felony case who has pleaded not guilty the right to waive a jury trial, will have a far reaching practical effect. In Cook county alone it is estimated that it will save the county hundreds of thousands of dollars a year and permit the judges to clear their calendars.

Sets Aside Old Practice.

This decision, which was written by Justice Frederic R. De Young and concurred in by the five other judges present at the summer conference, sets aside the practice of 60 or 70 years in most of the states of the union, and puts Illinois well to the front in criminal procedure.

Another question of great importance is on its way to the Supreme court. That is the question of whether juries in Illinois are judges of the law as well as the facts. A decision making them the judges of the facts only will put Illinois courts in line with the federal court procedure.

Simplification of indictments is another matter under consideration. That they may be ever so simple is the wish of the Supreme court.

"Fair Trial" Is Criterion.

The old days of throwing out a case because of a technical fault in a complicated indictment appear to have gone forever in this state, so far as the Supreme court is concerned.

"Bad punctuation will not vitiate an indictment," is one of its rules.

Its guiding rule in all criminal cases is found in People vs. White, 338 Ill. 33, as follows:

"It is not the purpose of a reviewing court to determine in a criminal case whether the record is perfect, but to determine whether the accused has had a fair trial and whether or not his conviction is based upon competent evidence establishing his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Where it can be said from the record that the errors complained of could not reasonably have affected the result of the trial, the judgment of the trial court should be approved."

Decision on Record Alone.

Where errors are flagrant, such as the arguing of the Leopold-Loeb case before a jury which had no concern with that case, merely for inflammatory purposes, or the inclusion of instructions to the jury which have been barred in many decisions, the case is reversed. The court acts on the record alone. It has no concern with what the state of the popular mind may be on a case.

An illustration of this attitude is given in the case of an initiative and referendum measure which former Gov. Edward F. Dunne was interested in having upon the ballot several years ago. The secretary of state would not put it on the ballot and Mr. Dunne went to Springfield to get a mandamus from the Supreme court. He talked with several of the judges about it and they told him they had little patience with the proposal. He was greatly surprised to find the court later granting the writ.

"I thought you fellows had no use for it," he said to one of the judges.

"Our personal notions have nothing to do with the law," the judge replied.

Law Overrules Inclinations.

The judges today may have little use for a law which permits an attorney to tell a jury that "you [the juror] are the judge of this law, whether it is a good law or a bad law," but the judges may find it necessary to support the state statute making that possible.

The jury waiver decision was delivered during the June term. Justice De Young in his opinion recognized the fact that the question raised was one of great importance in the administration of criminal law. Following precedent in New York and other states, he might easily have written an opinion that kept Illinois under the old practice, but he reviewed the grounds for these other decisions and went way back to the Magna Charta for his reasoning.

The case was one of rape, in which the defendant pleaded not guilty, waived a jury trial and was found not guilty before Judge Fisher. States Attorney Swanson, in order to make this a test, asked for a mandamus to expunge the proceedings from the record.

Goes Back 700 Years.

"Trial by jury in its present form," said Justice De Young, "did not come into existence until long after the year 1215, and the phrase 'lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land' [from Magna Charta] meant, in criminal cases, nothing more than a guaranty of the right to trial according to one of the then existing modes, namely, by battle, ordeal, or compurgation."

He quoets the Supreme court of the United States as saying:

"When our immediate ancestors removed to America, they brought this great privilege with them, as their birthright and inheritance, as part of that admirable common law which has fenced round and interposed barriers on every side against the approaches of arbitrary power. It is now incorporated into all our state constitutions as a fundamental right. . . ."

Upholds Right of Waiver.

"Accordingly," writes Justice De Young, "the Supreme court held that the effect of the constitutional provisions in respect of trial by jury is not to establish a tribunal as a part of the frame of government but only to guarantee to the accused the right to such a trial; that the provisions of article 3, section 2, of the constitution, relating to trial by jury, is not jurisdictional but confers a right upon the accused which cannot be withheld from him but which he may forego at his election; that in the absence of a waiver of such trial, expressly and intelligently made, the district court cannot proceed without a jury, not because the jury is necessary to its jurisdiction but because the accused is entitled by the provisions of the constitution to that mode of trial, and that the power of the defendant to waive a jury trial may be exercised in cases of felonies as well as misdemeanors."

After an exhaustive analysis of other decisions the court concludes:

"We conclude that the defendant in a criminal prosecution, whether the charge be a felony or a misdemeanor, has the power, upon a plea of not guilty, to waive a jury trial. While the defendant has that power in every criminal case, yet he should exercise it with caution. The value of trial by jury has been established by long experience and the institution has been safeguarded.

"Upon the trial court is imposed the duty to see that an accused person's election to forego such a trial is not only expressly but also understandingly made. The performance of that duty involves a responsibility which cannot be perfunctorily discharged."

It now costs $3,500 a day for juries in Cook county.

ISAACS REVEALS WHY EUROPE HAS SPEEDY JUSTICE

High Cost of Litigation Is Secret, Judge Says.

New York, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Justice runs a swifter course in the courts of Europe than here in America for the simple reason that it costs too much to litigate over there.

So Judge M. J. Isaacs of the Superior court of Cook county, Illinois, found on a first hand study of the situation extending in England and various countries of continental Europe. The Chicago jurist got back on the steamship Albert Ballin today with some well defined convictions on the result and an abounding hope of an improvement in conditions in the courts of America.

Cost Higher in Europe.

Judge Isaacs went abroad especially to look into European court methods and find out if possible why litigation can be carried on so much more expeditiously over there than here. He returned convinced that there is only one explanation.

"It simply costs too much money to litigate in Europe," he said. "For that reason they resort to litigation over there only as a last resort. Conditions are different here in that fees are so low that litigants prefer to go to court to prolonging efforts over compromise. We cannot hope to make our costs cheaper; but we can do something to hasten the bringing of cases to trial."

Wife with Judge.

"In my court alone in Cook county there were 1,276 cases on the docket or more cases than in all the courts of similar jurisdiction in England for a year.

"We hope to meet this growing perplexing problem out in Chicago by a scheme recently solved by our chief justice, the head of the law division and the head of the equity division, whereby the attorneys must agree upon a date of trial and if when the date is agreed upon it is not carried out, then five additional days are given. If, after the five days there is no agreement the case is postponed for two months and if the attorneys are not ready by that time, the case is postponed for three years or thrown out."

The judge was accompanied by Mrs. Issacs.

36,000 DEATHS FROM AUTO ACCIDENTS IS ESTIMATE FOR 1930

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Based on reports for the first six months of the year the American Motorists' association today estimated deaths from automobile accidents this year would reach or surpass the 36,000 mark.

The first six months showed, the association said, an increase of 9 per cent in such deaths over the corresponding period of 1929. The total last year was 33,060. The association indicated an even higher rate of increase might be expected because of an expectation that the last three months will yield a higher proportion than the rest of the year. This happens every year, the report said.

The greatest number of accidents was said to occur between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening and Sunday was listed as the most dangerous day.

Catholic Women Call First Federation Meeting

The first formal meeting of the Chicago archdiocesan federation of Catholic women, representing 200,000 women of that denomination in the Chicago area, will be held next Saturday afternoon. The Rt. Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, auxiliary bishop of Chicago, will address the gathering in the assembly hall of Quigley preparatory seminary, at Rush and Pearson streets, at 2 o'clock.

CUSTOMS CHIEF EXPLAINS DROP IN COLLECTIONS

A general decrease in United States customs receipts, amounting to about 50 per cent, has not been due to the passage of the 1930 tariff act but to abnormaal importations and a general slump in business, F. X. A. Eble, United States commissioner of customs, said yesterday.

Mr. Eble was in Chicago yesterday consulting Collector of Customs Anthony Czarnecki, other customs employés and Chicago importers on the new rate schedules. Particular attention was given to plans for handling the huge volume of imports expected for the World's Fair in 1933.

The commissioner said importers of sugar, leather, textiles, and other merchandise stocked the markets before the adoption of the tariff act to take advantage of the old rates, and that this has brought about the unusual condition of customs receipts.

Swimmer Hit by Speedboat Seeks Damages of $25,000

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Ernest Wokerle, 22 year old aviation student, today filed suit for $25,000 against the Venice, Cal., Speedboat company and others. He bases his suit on an accident in the Pacific ocean Aug. 10, in which Wokerle, who was swimming, was run over by a speedboat. One of his legs was injured to the extent that Wokerle will walk lame and has difficulty handling mechanical controls, his suit states.

Cashier of Closed Bank at Hurst, Ill., Arrested

Marion, Ill., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Four warrants were issued this afternoon for the arrest of W. B. Sizemore, cashier of the Hurst State bank at Hurst, Ill., which closed its doors on April 7. The warrants were issued by State's Attorney Roy Browning and charged embezzlement, which Browning estimates will reach $35,000. The Hurst bank was the first of seven in Williamson county to close last April.

SANITY

In advertising, far-seeing merchants are emphasizing the extent of the reduction in prices as compared with last year, or former years. Articles that formerly were offered at $50.00 or $75.00 are now offered at $30.00 or $50.00. The figures, or the difference, might be more or less.

Most merchants who are wise are trustful and honest in all this. Not to be, is a form of insanity. Insanity ends in failure.

The point is: people now seem willing to buy goods in quantities which fit their purses if they are satisfied the prices asked are fair and normal, according to the times.

The people are right in their demand for lower prices.

VOTERS TO FILL 58 OFFICES AT NOV. 4 ELECTION

State, County, and City Candidates Listed.

In less than eight weeks the voters of Cook county will be given the task of revising the roster of who's who in their public life and of determining their attitude on prohibition.

These duties will be performed on Tuesday, Nov. 4, when the citizens are to elect 58 state, county, and municipal officers and vote on the state prohibition referendum, among other civic propositions included in the general election.

The campaign for United States senator leads the list of three major offices involved in the election outside Cook county. The two others are state treasurer and state superintendent of public instruction.

The Cook county campaign affects 38 offices and the remaining 17 on the ballot are in the Municipal court. There as now 117 candidates in the field for the various offices, but this number may be increased by the time for filing independent candidacies expires on Sept. 25.

Little Ballot Propositions.

Several propositions, aside from the prohibition referendum, are to be voted on, among them the proposed amendment to the revenue article of the state constitution, otherwise called the income tax amendment. The time for certifying propositions to be voted on at the general election does not expire until 35 days before the election, and it is understood a few more proposals may be added.

A municipal proposition now on foot proposes filtration of the Chicago water supply. A $2,500,000 bond issue for the forest preserve district also will be on the ballot. A state bond issue of $14,000,000 for creation of a wild life sanctuary and further expansion of state conservation and recreation facilities is provided for in another proposition.

The principal county offices involved in this election are treasurer, clerk, judge, sheriff, all the county commissioners, the probate judge and clerk, Criminal court clerk, superintendent of schools, two members of the board of review and one of the board of assessors. Six judges of the Superior and Circuit court will be elected to fill vacancies, and five sanitary district trustees will be named.

The municipal officers up for election are chief justice of the Municipal court, 14 associate justices, the bailiff and clerk. Two of the associate justices will be chosen to fill vacancies.

Instructions for Voters.

The board of election commissioners has issued instructions regarding registration of voters who have moved since the last election or who have failed to register. Changes in the law provide that voters whose names do not now appear on the registration books in their precincts may apply in person for registration at the offices of the board in the city hall until and including Sept. 20. Voters who have moved since their last registration transfer the registration, until and including Sept. 20.

The board said these privileges were limited to voters who have resided in their present precincts for 30 days.

Bernard W. Snow, Republican county chairman, yesterday announced that the regular Republican campaign sponsored by the county committee would be supplemented by a number of special nonpolitical committees of business men interested in supporting the Republican ticket. He made known the appointment of the first of these special committees which will work in behalf of the sanitary district trustee candidates.

The committee consists of Joseph P. Griffin, Rush C. Butler, Wallace G. Clark, George W. Paullin, Oscar F. Nelson, and H. W. Elmore.

NEW METHOD TESTS VALUE OF SUN'S RAYS

With sunshine losing its health value as fall approaches Health Commissioner Kegel yesterday advised residents to stay out of doors as much as possible during the next three weeks to store up ultra violet rays in the body to resist disease. For seven months from October to May few of the ultra violet rays penetrate the Chicago atmosphere.

Dr. Fred O. Tonney, head of the research laboratories of the health department, has perfected a simple method of measuring the rays.

The new gauge is based on the amount of decomposition that takes place in a specified quantity of oxalic acid in a given period. It worked out at the Dunes testing station maintained by Dr. Tonney in the Indiana state park, where smoke does not obscure the sun's rays. It has supplanted the old and expensive method of using a spectroscope.

"Any locality may test the health quality of sunshine easily and quickly and at a very low cost," said Dr. Tonney. "Rural and urban conditions can be compared and also smoke effects, seasonal variations and hourly changes in the quantity and quality of the health giving rays."

AIR TOURISTS AID IN DEDICATION OF DULUTH AIRPORT

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Duluth today, joined by leading aviators of the nation, including pilots contesting in the national reliability air tour who landed here this afternoon from Eau Claire, Wis., dedicated its $300,000 municipal airport.

The first of the 35 planes in the 1930 national air tour landed at the new airport shortly after official exercises dedicating the field had been held.

Zeller First to Arrive.

Myron Zeller, Dearborn, Mich., piloting a Ford trimotored plane, was the first of the competing pilots to land here at 2:59 p. m. He was followed two minutes later by Arthur Davis, Lansing, Mich., with the other planes arriving at brief intervals. Zeller required approximately one hour to fly from Eau Claire, a distance of about 125 miles by air.

The planes in the tour will stay in Duluth tonight, the flight to be resumed Sunday morning. The schedule calls for a takeoff at the Duluth field at 10 a. m. for Grand Forks, 250 miles from here.

Governor at Dedication.

Tonight those competing in the tour, as well as the several persons accompanying in 17 planes, were guests at a dinner.

Gov. Theodore Christianson of Minnesota was one of the speakers at the dedication ceremonies today, with A. B. Kapplin, Duluth, Minn., American Legion commander, giving the dedicatory address and unveiling the monument erected in memory of two Duluth young men after whom the flying field has been named.

John G. Oglesby Reported Recovering from Operation

John G. Oglesby, lieutenant governor of Illinois during the terms of Governors Deneen and Lowden, was reported to be well on the road to recovery at the Presbyterian hospital yesterday afternoon. Mr. Oglesby is convalescing after an operation performed on Thursday by Dr. Arthur Dean Bevan.

POLICE HOLD MAN AFTER SHOOTING; VICTIM MAY DIE

William Anderson, 22 years old, of 2113 North Mozart avenue, was shot in the abdomen and perhaps fatally wounded yesterday afternoon by Walter Weick, 42 years old, of 2012 Cleveland avenue, in whose home the shooting occurred. Weick was held for questioning by the Hudson avenue police. Anderson was taken to the Augustana hospital.

According to Woodrow Murray of 1419 Warner avenue, a friend of the two men, Weick and Anderson argued over a small amount of money and in a scuffle Anderson was shot. Anderson maintained that the shooting was accidental.

In another shooting yesterday afternoon Hugo Mallman of 4244 North Leavitt street, who is deaf and dumb, was shot below the heart by his brother, William, who is deaf. The North Robey street police took William into custody while they investigated the shooting. The wounded youth was removed to the Ravenswood hospital. His condition was said to be serious.

PUZZLED, CAROL URGES HELEN TO QUIT RUMANIA

BUDAPEST, Sept. 13.—(AP)—Reliable reports reaching here from the Rumanian capital quote King Carol II. as saying "the best thing Queen Helene can do is leave Rumania." In connection with his perplexing situation.

It is understood Carol has abandoned his proposed coronation ceremonies altogether, since the government and all political parties insist Queen Helene be crowned at the same time and be recognized as his wife. Carol is said to quote a precedent for this, pointing out that his brother-in-law, King Alexander of Jugo-Slavia, reigned for a long time without coronation.

The king's problem is increased by persistent reports that Mme. Magda Lupescu, his companion before he took the Rumanian throne, is at Sinaia, the royal summer capital. These reports gain more confirmation daily. The palace guard has been trebled and the king has confined his audiences to the smallest possible circles, even his ministers being unable to obtain interviews.

RESPECT FOR LAW.

"We do not blink the fact," said Chief Justice Hughes in his address before the convention of the American Bar association, "that the greatest need of this country today is improvement in the administration of justice, especially of the criminal law. More important than uniform laws, or mere changes in procedural details, more necessary than any statement of the law, is the fostering of respect for law itself and the maintenance of the primary safeguards of life and property against organized criminal assaults, against the debauching of our institutions by the capitalization of crime."

There will be little dissent from this opinion of the chief justice, but we may venture to say that it does not reach the heart of the matter. Most Americans who observe the somewhat troubled surface of contemporaneous events are sufficiently aware that administration of justice is deficient. Fewer realize that a fundamental source of its weakness is not in administration but in legislation. It is not enough, it seems to us, to point out that mere improvements in the procedure or mechanism of the law are of relatively little moment compared to the fostering of respect for law itself and the maintenance of the primary safeguards of society. It is necessary also to inquire why, if it be true, respect for law is lacking and why the maintenance of primary safeguards has to so great an extent been weakened.

As to fostering respect for law itself, we think the chief justice would agree that it is useless to expect in a great population or among men generally so strong a devotion to an abstract concept of law as will withstand dissatisfaction with laws in the concrete. This is a fallacy which tempts the legal mind, but it has no support in our experience nor in that, we venture to assert, of any other people. If the actual regulations, that is, the statutes, with which the people come in contact are ill conceived or have not the sanction of their approval or acquiescence, a plea for the abstract sanctity of law will not console them.

The only practical or effectual way of fostering respect for the law is to see to it that the laws appeal to the consensus of good citizenship as just and expedient, and this we think our lawmakers, especially of late years, have failed to do. Our people are invited in the name of an abstract concept of law as an essential of order and justice to submit to laws and regulations which profoundly violate the sense of right and justice and even of expedience among a very large part, perhaps even a majority, of our citizens. A conspicuous source of disrespect for law is the refusal of the right of equal representation. The enactments of a legislature which exists by reason of the persistent and brazen repudiation of a constitutional mandate to apportion representation according to population cannot in common sense be expected to receive, and do not deserve, the respect of the citizens. A legislature which refuses to provide for all practicable equality among citizens in representation confers very little sanctity upon the laws which it puts forth. It does not itself show respect for law and it cannot expect it from the people while its own lawlessness persists. This is the result of ill considered law making, not of failure of respect for law in the abstract or of weaknesses in legal administration. Also we have enacted so many laws that equal enforcement is physically impossible. Hence there is the necessity of choice as to which laws shall be enforced and which left unenforced, or even as to whom shall be punished and whom not. This also is an evil which no appeal for devotion to law in the abstract can offset.

In short, the first essential to what the constitution sets forth as one of the ends of American government, the establishment of justice, is not reform in administration or in the attitude of the American people toward law in the abstract, but reform in legislation to the end that laws shall be practically and equally enforceable and shall command that common consent upon which the laws of a free people must be founded.

COLOR PRINTING.

A glance at today's colorotо section forcibly reminds us that among THE TRIBUNE'S features in which it takes a special pride is its color printing. The press which produces it is the result of persistent experiment and development by TRIBUNE technicians and is an exclusive accomplishment. The problem of giving pure color with delicate shades and nuances at the high speed and on a grade of paper usable by a newspaper of large circulation is a very difficult one, much more difficult of solution than printing for magazines or books, which are able to use heavy calendered paper printed at a relatively slow speed. Nevertheless, THE TRIBUNE invention and technical skill has attained a measure of success which we think a careful comparison will show is unequaled in magazine or newspaper reproduction either in America or Europe and surpasses in color range and in delicacy all but the best work in books of the highest class. Thus famous works of art, as well as portraiture and landscape work of the camera, are being reproduced with a beauty and truth of color and texture which a discriminating taste must approve. And this achievement is not ended. Every effort is being given and will continue to be given to the further development of processes and the perfecting of results. Results up to this time have encouraged assurance of further progress.

UNSTANDARDIZED AMERICA.

Of mechanized Americans and the standardization of all our life much may be heard amid the general bitterness that Europe spreads over all things pertaining to this western continent. As Greece was cultured but not civilized, and as Europe, to be sure, is both civilized and cultured, so America is civilized but not cultured, says the Frenchman, Pierre Dominique, or, as others say, neither civilized nor cultured. And chief among our faults, as ailing Europe sees us, is the complete and rigid standardization of our lives.

Such remarks the American will rarely analyze or doubt. We see machines about our daily lives. We succeed in mass production as Europe never can. And we easily assume, therefore, that life itself is mechanized. That the real diversity and tangle of our lives never has been greater well may be the case, but few will recognize it. Over the steretotype of criticism few will observe the facts.

The routines and the standard ways of living have been broken by mechanical intrusions: this may be observed. The slow rhythms and materials and habits, the common foods and routine occupations, the clothes and songs and usages of old times, such as Europe still retains, have been thrust aside by modern powers and new diversities: this is every day's experience for Americans. New standardizations there may be, but for every new one here imposed three have passed away. We eat commercial breakfast foods, but the old "hog and hominy" universally consumed has gone. We all hear new tunes each month in cabarets and on the radio, but the old standby songs of sentiment and sugar, sung through the years, are now forgotten. We take new styles of clothes, of thoughts, of manners and of reading and rapidly consume them, and the old conformities of a close and narrow past tend to disappear. New standardizations there may be, and not all of them are beautiful; but old conventions and routines are broken down far faster.

The present problem of American life is not overstandardization. The bewilderment of change and the lack of correlation between the wild movements of our life, the chaos and the speed of living and the lack of long routines and habitual serenities disturb our western life, but the critic fails to see a contradiction in his thesis. Those who have looked upon America with seeing eyes; those who have read books such as "Middletown," know that the flux and restlessness, the change and differential in our living, and the lack of general standardization underlie the characteristic phenomena of the western world. But the critics, blind, ignorant and shallow, see only their own thin thesis.

Today the new diversity and change in living upsets accustomed social orders and drives the individual into doubt and restlessness. Foods change, play changes, work changes, clothes change, morality and religion, love and laughter, wars and families, education and art, all are changing, and in America the most of all. All is in transition, and a Europe looking on senses the inevitable, hates and knows not why.

In getting a living and in leisure the changes are greatest, say the authors of "Middletown." Training the young, community activities and making a home follow more or less in order, while religious activity changes least of all. They are movements quite unsynchronized, and within their tensions and their complications the standardization of life has been well nigh impossible. To compensate for chaos and wild change, the American often will bear down hard on the uniformities that are available, and Babbittry and derby hats and the hail fellowship of Pullman cars result. Problems America has in huge measure. They arise, not in standardization, but in diversity and chaos and change in modern life.

Editorial of the Day

OPPORTUNITIES IN RUSSIA.

[New York Times.]

To Senator Wheeler, returning from a two months' visit in soviet Russia, the potentialities of that country as a market for American goods are more vividly present than they have ever been in the ten years during which he has urged diplomatic recognition of the soviet government. Mr. Wheeler finds that our refusal to recognize the Moscow government is costing us "millions." And yet he must know that American trade with Russia has been doing very well indeed, strikingly better than the trade of recognizing governments like Germany and Great Britain.

It is, of course, conceivable that, in the face of American refusal to recognize and for the purpose of temporary advantages on the continent, the soviet government might divert elsewhere a considerable part of its present purchases in the United States. But that very fact would prove that commerce with Russia is conditioned by noncommercial factors and therefore lacking in the elements of stability. It is difficult to take a long range view of our interests in Russia, to speak of the "potentialities" of the Russian market, when soviet policy as a whole is in continuous flux. The most ambitious American experiment with the soviet concessions policy about which so much was said a few years ago—the Harriman enterprises—has come to grief. In London day before yesterday an even larger undertaking, the Lena goldfields concession, was formally declared by an arbitration tribunal, in which the soviet government named one member, to have been violated by the Moscow government. A British investment of $17,500,000 was thus destroyed. Exports into Russia, of course, do not carry the same risk as foreign capital investments inside of Russia. But the work of transformation to which the communist government is dedicated makes it hard to visualize the distant potentialities which we are supposed to be sacrificing.

HIS PEDIGREE.

The man was in the hospital after his first serious attempt to knock a train off the tracks.

"I fear I can be of very little assistance to you," he was comfortably assured by the doctor. "I'm a veterinary surgeon."

"Ah!" exclaimed the victim, "you're just the man for my case. I was a jackass for ever attempting to cross the track ahead of that train."—Santa Fé Magazine.

PRECAUTION.

"She said if any man kissed her without warning, she would scream for her father."

"What did you do?"

"I warned her."—Service Magazine.

AMERICAN HEROES

ISAAC HULL

A Brief Review of His Contribution to Our Country.

(The articles of which the following is the seventeenth are intended as five minute sketches of early Americans of particular achievement and distinction, each flashed briefly against the background of the times and conditions in which the subject made his contribution to the nation. Their names may be well or may be little known now to the generation which has inherited the benefits of wise, laborious, and, in many instances, heroic work.)

(Picture in Rotogravure Section.)

AS SOON as the United States won its independence the New Englanders spread their sails for world trade, the Bostonese for the tea and silks of China, the sailors of Salem to India and the Spice islands. The dey of Algiers then taught American adventurers, when he could catch them, that a merchant marine without a fighting navy to protect it was out of luck. Congress, under Washington, saw the point. Six superfrigates were authorized by an act approved March 27, 1794. Only three were launched. The dey had seen the light of what appeared to him for the time being to be reason and had signed a treaty. The United States saw the light of what was plainly unreason and stopped the building of three of its frigates. The other three, more advanced, were permitted to continue in construction. They were the Constellation, the United States, and the Constitution, the Old Ironsides which is now about to show its proud old form, rebuilt, to the port cities of the country. All six frigates were designed as new models.

The Constitution was a single deck, 44 gun ship with the power usually found on a two gundeck ship. Single deck meant that it had one gundeck with the forecastle and quarter deck. The design gave it a heavier broadside than that of ships of its class and a speed which the ships of equal gunfire did not possess. The frigate was launched Sept. 20, 1797, and began a brilliant career, one of many battles in several wars, under many commanders, engaged against squadrons and in duels—never outsailed, never defeated, colors never lowered and still afloat—133 years alive on the seas.

At the beginning of the war of 1812 the Constitution was under the command of Isaac Hull, one in the series of notable American commodores who at some time or other flew the broad pennant on this ship. Hull was born in Derby, Conn., in 1775 and had been a merchant sailor. He was commissioned a lieutenant in the navy when the French naval depredations began in 1798.

At the beginning of the war with Great Britain he put to sea with the Constitution to cruise for prizes in defiance of the British blockading squadrons off New York. Almost immediately he and his ship were forced to prove their consummate qualities of seamanship and seaworthiness. The Constitution encountered a British squadron in conditions which seemed to defy escape. The wind failed for three days and Hull kept his frigate out of the range of the enemy gunfire by the use of every device known to a becalmed commander. His men, towing or kedging, had to contend against all the boat crews of a squadron endeavoring to bring one ship up in the calm.

After three days the wind came up and the Constitution was safe. Aug. 3, 1812, Hull again put to sea for prizes and cruised toward Halifax. Far off Cape Cod the lookout saw a ship down on the horizon and the Constitution gave chase. After several hours the stranger was seen to be waiting for the American to come up, and presently was revealed as the British frigate Guerriere, a 38 gun ship, French built.

A story of the famous battle written by James Fenimore Cooper, and published after his death in Putnam's Magazine of 1853, describes the action:

"The Constitution had about a league to run before she could get alongside of the stranger. At 5 p. m. [Aug. 19], being then at long gunshot, the Englishman showed three ensigns, in different parts of his vessel, and commenced firing at very long shot. After discharging the guns of one side he would wear and fire those of the other. These maneuvers induced the Americans to yaw to prevent being raked, though they fired but three or four guns in approaching. These evolutions, and the short sail carried, retarded the approach of the Constitution essentially, and she was near an hour getting within a short range of her enemy. At 6 p. m., however, the Englishman bore up, and ran off with the wind on his larboard quarter, under his topsails and jib. The Constitution then set her main topgallant sail to close.

"A few minutes later the forward guns of the American ship, and the after guns of the English, bore, when each party commenced his fire, the two frigates being within a hundred yards of each other. As the Constitution had the most way on her she drew gradually ahead, until she came fairly abeam. Just as the two ships were square with each other the mizzenmast of the stranger came down, over the starboard quarter. This, of course, caused the American frigate to draw ahead still faster, and in about fifteen minutes after she had begun to fire she was so far forward as to induce Hull to luff short around his enemy's bows to rake him. After having fired three raking broadsides the Constitution attempted to wear and resume her former course, parallel to that of the Guerriere, but, owing to the loss of braces and other running rigging, the Constitution wore so slowly that the bowsprit of the Guerriere passed diagonally over the quarter deck of the Constitution, and finally dropped astern with her starboard bow against the Constitution's larboard or lee quarter gallery. This was an awkward position and might have led to serious consequences had not the enemy been pretty effectually threshed before it occurred. As it was, two or three of the Englishman's forward guns were discharged with effect into the stern and quarter of Old Ironsides, so close as to set fire to the cabin. Hoffman, who was in command there, behaved admirably, extinguishing the fire and protecting his men with great spirit and coolness.

"While this scene was in the course of being acted below, one still more serious occurred on the quarter deck. Both parties galled away boarders, as the ships came foul. All the English boarders and marines collected forward, while the Americans rushed aft. Missiles were thrown by hand from ship to ship, but boarding was out of the question, on account of the sea, the distance between the bulwarks of the two frigates, and the force collected on the deck of each to repel such an attempt. The Constitution drew ahead and parted from her adversary, moving off on the same tack. As the two ships separated the Englishman's fore and main masts both came by the board, leaving him wallowing in the sea and encumbered with wreck. Of course, this decided the affair, leaving Old Ironsides effectually the victor, and affording her time to look to the security of her own spars, which were of the last moment to her, in a sea that would certainly be soon swarming with enemies."

When Hull had made his repairs he returned to the Guerriere, which was helpless. Capt. Dacres, who had been wounded, lowered his flag and Hull received him on board the Constitution at the companion way with: "Give me your hand, Dacres, I know you are hurt." The superiority of the American frigate made the outcome inevitable, but that was an admission British naval officers had not been prepared to make.

Hull brought the news of his victory back to Boston at a time most opportune not only for the nation, but for the Hull family. His uncle, the old revolutionary soldier, Gen. Hull, had just made a humiliating surrender of Detroit and the people needed a tonic. Their sea victory gave it to them.

Congress voted Hull a gold medal and the Constitution was placed first in the naval pride of his countrymen. The commodore died in Philadelphia in 1843.

FIRST AID BOOKLETS.

SOME of the recipes and methods for first aid in camping and for home care and use have been put together in a booklet which we call "Some First Aid Procedures" and which we issue as No. 14 in the "How to Live With" series. We recognize that the meaning of words is stretched when this booklet is put in the "How to Live With" series. But since there is no other series in which to put it, this is another groundhog case.

So many requests for one or another article dealing with household needs and minor emergencies are received that assembling some of the articles into more easily kept form seemed desirable.

The booklet is sent on request, provided a dime and a stamped, self-addressed envelope are inclosed.

Of course there are bigger and better books on this subject, but they are not so cheaply replaced and fires must be started. There are those who think the people know enough or too much about first aid. Maybe they have read it or they need to read it again. On yesterday the writer saw a woman faint. A kindly soul raised her head and held it in her lap, while a large crowd of other kindly souls circled around, shutting off the fresh air. Some were drawn by curiosity but some wanted to help. Every person in that crowd needed to know what to do in case of fainting. If they had read what to do they needed to read it again.

Also on yesterday this department received a state health department periodical which carried something about ticks. There is a group of newly recognized fevers which we share with animals and for which ticks furnish the transportation facilities. We may never build dipping vats for folks similar to those for stock built by our farmer friends, but we are liable to develop an interest in ticks. Turning over the pages of the booklet we find a paragraph on ticks, how to repel them and how to compel them to give up a good thing. Needless to say, the booklet chronicles the enduring battle over recipes for chiggers and methods of repelling mosquitoes.

CANCER NOT CONTAGIOUS.

Mrs. E. C. writes:

1. Is cancer a contagious disease?
2. How can I protect myself and my children who live in the same house?

REPLY.

1. No.
2. They are in no danger. Cleanliness and care that is in good taste is all that is needed.

WARM AND COOL BATHS.

M. S. B. writes: My friend and I recently argued about methods of keeping cool during the hot spell. My friend maintained that a hot shower on a warm day will prove more cooling and beneficial, while I believe that a cold shower will drive the heat from the surface of the body and this will prove more cooling.

REPLY.

You win.
One may raise a fever by taking a hot bath.

MINERAL OIL IS GOOD.

R. F. writes: After having lived on a diet for several years that was heavily spiked with prunes, turnip tops, corn bread, peanuts and bran, I find that I am troubled with constipation just as much as I was before I was advised as to what to eat. If I am to resort to medicine for the balance of my days, I would like to inquire as to the proper kind.

REPLY.

If you want to take medicine. I presume mineral oil is best for you, or mineral oil and agar.

Have you tried drinking several glasses of faintly salted water on getting out of bed?

PROPERTY ASSESSMENTS.

Chicago, Sept. 3.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—There are 23 brick bungalows in our block, 22 of which were constructed by contractors in a group, mine having been built by a private contractor. Work was started on my house the middle of March, 1928. But when the group contractors started work they soon caught up and by May had the roofs up on three of their houses before my roof was up. When tax notices were received all but me had taxes on vacant. 1. How does the board of assessors figure the taxes? 2. If what I understand is correct why should I receive improved taxes while others got taxes on vacant? 3. If there is an error in my taxes what must I do? G. W.

1. The property is supposed to be assessed as of its value April 1st. For further information as to the method followed by the assessors, we suggest you write to them.
2. You do not give us the facts as to the condition of the property April 1st.
3. The first thing to do is to investigate at the board of assessors.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

TO REPAIR OLD BUILDING.

Chicago, Sept. 4.—[Friend of the People.]—I want to call the attention of the building commission, through your column, to a deplorable condition which is at the gateway of the World's Fair—29th and Calumet avenue.

The corner frame building is falling to pieces and the steps have already caved in.

During the winter the heavy snows and winds will make this corner a danger to the passersby. It would be better to have this building demolished before some innocent lives are lost. J. M. R.

We have made an inspection of the frame building located on Calumet avenue and have sent a notice to the agent to repair and put the building in a safe condition.

CHRISTIAN P. PASCHEN,
Commissioner of Buildings.

OIL STOCK.

Chicago, Sept. 2.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—Would like to know what state or other requirements must be met before a person can engage in buying and selling oil royalties [not securities] for his own account in the city of Chicago. Is it necessary to obtain a license of any kind and would such activities come under the "Blue Sky law"? A. E.

To ascertain whether your facts are covered by the blue sky law, you should write to the secretary of state, Springfield.

WHERE HE WANTS BOTH ANIMALS

FROM THE TRIBUNE'S COLUMNS

16 YEARS AGO TODAY

SEPTEMBER 14, 1914.

ROME, via Paris.—News from Petrograd is to the effect that the Austrian prisoners now in the hands of the Russians aggregate about 200,000.

LONDON.—The government is momentarily expecting news of the surrender of the two great Austrian armies commanded by Gens. von Auffenberg and Dankl, which have been shattered by the Russians in Galicia. The Austrians have been completely surrounded and cut off from food supplies and ammunition, after making desperate endeavors to concentrate in the vicinity of Rawaruska. Rome, Petrograd, and Paris reports agree that the Russian victories of the last few days have utterly overwhelmed Austrian military power in Galicia.

FOLKESTONE.—Passengers from Flushing bring the rumor that the Anglo-Belgian army has reoccupied Brussels, the Germans having previously evacuated the city.

LONDON.—The precipitate flight of the German right wing is being continued and their left, while giving more resistance to the constant attacks of the allies, is slowly retreating. The latest official announcement from Paris is that the forward march of the allies is being kept up along the whole front and that the armies are "in constant contact with the enemy." The allies' left has crossed the River Ceinse. The evacuation of Amiens by the Germans was officially announced. They also have evacuated Lille. Gen. Joffre reported to Gen. Gallienie, military governor of Paris: "The battle of the last five days has ended in undeniable victory."

30 YEARS AGO TODAY

SEPTEMBER 14, 1900.

GALVESTON.—Cremation of the bodies of hurricane victims continues. Four hundred bodies, mostly women and children, were given to the flames today. They were unrecognizable and a horror to the eye and nostril. Many were gathered from the surf and others found in the wreckage of homes. Fires were most numerous in the west end, where loss of life was the heaviest. The condition of the destitute has improved. Food, ice, and disinfectants have come in.

CHICAGO.—Chicago's relief train, leaving last night with 90,000 pounds of provisions for the Texas flood victims, is now gathering up contributions in Iowa, Missouri and Kansas on its way to Galveston.

SCRANTON, Pa.—The great anthracite miners' strike began today, although the order calling the men out is not effective until Monday. Few mines are in operation today and mine leaders are busy preparing for a long siege. Miners at Bellevue and Dodge, two big collieries operated by the Lackawanna railroad, refused to go to work.

65 YEARS AGO TODAY

SEPTEMBER 14, 1865.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Gen. Grant and his party reached this city this afternoon. They left Springfield in the morning after visiting the tomb of President Lincoln at Oak Ridge cemetery. Gen. Grant wrote his name in the register at the cemetery.

NEW YORK.—A Washington dispatch says: Another illustration of the change going on in the minds of southern men concerning Negro labor was revealed in a conversation between the owner of large plantations in Georgia and President Johnson. The Georgian intends to return home immediately and subdivide his plantations into tracts of from 10 to 50 acres and lease them for a number of years to the most reliable and industrious of his former Negro servants. A delegation from Mississippi, consisting of the late rebel generals, Tutt and Featherstone, and the Rev. Dr. Murphy of Columbus, Miss., told the President that when the Freedman's bureau was organized the people of the south had not made up their minds fully to accept the Negro as a man, but a few short months has made a wonderful change and the people now universally accept the conclusions of the war and acknowledge the freedom of the colored race.

CHICAGO.—Charles Kaltenbach of the firm of Kaltenbach & Co., hardware merchants, was seriously injured when the horse he was driving hitched to a wagon ran away. The wagon collided with another vehicle.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Writers should confine themselves to 200 or 300 words. Give full name and addresses. No manuscripts can be returned. Address Voice of the People, The Tribune.

THE DOLE.

Chicago, Sept. 5.—This morning THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE publishes, under the heading, "Effects of the Dole," what it termed an interesting letter to the London Times. I fail to find anything of interest in it; but perhaps it is due to my Dutch obtuseness, which I have never been able to lose since I came to this country.

No one, with a grain of common sense, would say that the dole system, as it is applied in some of the countries of Europe, is desirable, or is the last word in the efficient handling of the unemployment problem. It is only a temporary remedy, although a very costly one, until a better way is found out of a very serious economic problem. Of course, there are always some people that will try to take an undue advantage of it, like the persons that were referred to in the article. Human nature is inclined to be that way.

During the summer of 1927 I visited Holland, the country of my birth, and in the course of conversation with some of the unemployed workingmen whom I met in a park at Amsterdam I remarked that the dole system was wrong in principle; that it fostered laziness, and must be a very expensive experiment to Holland.

"That is all very true," I was told, "but this government is not going to let any one here starve to death while there is money and food in this country."

At the present time in Holland, I am reliably informed, the dole is being stopped, and work instead is provided by the government to the unemployed of the cities, through the cultivation of land in the peat fields in the eastern part of Holland. The unproductive land there is made fertile, thereby increasing its value.

The draining of the Zuider Zee, by the Dutch government, which is being undertaken at present, will add another province to the country, besides furnishing employment to a large number of workingmen. If this country would take an example of little Holland and provide similar undertakings for the relief of the unemployed, there would be more truth in the familiar slogan, of "government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

JUDGE LYLE.

Chicago, Sept. 5.—I think I am voicing the opinion of a great many people when I say that a man with the courage and diligence of Judge Lyle should receive coöperation and help instead of hindrance. If we had more men of his type Chicago would soon be different.

RUDOLPHUS.

THE DEAN OF ALIMONY ROW.

Chicago, Sept. 5.—I have been a chance recipient of very unkind comment concerning the attitude of my client, and Circuit Judge Philip J. Finnegan, in sentencing William Hulen Donald, so-called "Dean of Alimony Row," to the county jail for contempt of court.

The commitment order was based on evidence showing that the complainant, a woman of 71, was destitute, without a relative to whom she could look for aid, entirely dependent upon charity. The defendant, a man of 77, was shown to be residing in a two flat apartment building, occupying one of the flats, renting rooms in the same, the other apartment being occupied by his son, who incidentally has a judgment lien on the property, which stands in the name of the defendant, which he refuses to remove so that the property may be sold. A two car garage is also on the premises, one being rented, and the other occupied by the car of the defendant.

It must be understood that even under the foregoing facts it was with extreme reluctance that the court passed judgment on the aged defendant, but an order of court had been defied, and it was the duty of Judge Finnegan to punish for its violation. The responsibility for the order decreeing that the defendant pay for the maintenance of my client was on other shoulders; Judge Finnegan merely saw to its enforcement. If the defendant was unable to pay for the support of the complainant it was his duty to petition for a reduction or abatement of the alimony, but as long as the order of court stood finding that the defendant could pay the amount specified it was the duty of the court to see that it was respected, and no criticism can be justifiably directed at him for so doing.

GREGORY A. GELDERMAN.

AN ARMY OF 110,000

Chicago, Sept. 5.—At this time when the hay fever season is at its worst, when people are undergoing all kinds of suffering, what are the political leaders of this city doing about giving aid to these unfortunates? What is the health department doing and what about the notices sent out to the property owners to cut weeds on their property? There is a young army of 110,000 sufferers in this city and this same army will mean the swaying of elections and then relief to sufferers.

MOTHER JONES IS RESIGNED TO EARLY PASSING

Aged Labor Leader Keen on Public Affairs.

Silver Spring, Md., Sept. 13.—[U.P.]—For the first time since her illness began nearly a year ago, Mother Jones, aged labor leader, has become resigned to death.

"Sometimes I wish I could jump out of bed, get dressed, and go out and fight, but I know I'm all through," she told the United Press today.

Mother Jones, 100 years old May 1, has been growing weaker within the last few days. Her physician has been amazed at her tenacity, but he has told close friends of Mother Jones that she cannot be expected to live much longer. He is called to her bedside frequently.

Talks on Public Events.

Yet, knowing she could not much longer fight off death, she welcomed a United Press correspondent to her bedside today and talked freely and vigorously of the public events in which she has played a fighting part.

She told about calling on Mr. Coolidge when he was President to protest against the treatment accorded strikers' children in California. As she was leaving, she said Mr. Coolidge asked, "Mother, would you object to having your picture taken with me?"

She replied, "No, Mr. President, but perhaps you would. You know, there are a great many people who consider me nothing but a bolshevist and it may make a lot of trouble if my picture is seen with yours."

Photograph Is Taken.

Mr. Coolidge, she said, replied, "Mother, we all get knocks now and then. We can pass it off." The picture was taken.

Mother Jones expressed disappointment at the present administration.

"I wish the world could see more men like Lincoln," she said. She then told of knowing Lincoln personally.

On her 100th birthday she received a telegram of congratulations from John D. Rockefeller Jr., whom she had fought in the Colorado mine war nearly forty years ago. When the elder Rockefeller celebrated his birthday a few weeks later, Mother Jones wired him congratulations, declaring, "Thank God we have some men in the world yet as good as you."

But she has not made peace with some of the other capitalists.

"I will hate them until I die," she declared in mentioning some of them.

Old Friends Care for Her.

Her only nourishment now is a little milk and cocoa. Without relatives, she is cared for by old friends, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Burgess, who took her into their humble isolated farm house a few miles from here. She hates the city, she says, and she wants to die in the quiet farm house.

When talking on some subject that arouses her, the feeble little woman rises forward in bed and her quavering voice becomes strong again, giving some hint of the power she once exercised on the platform in labor fights. Then she becomes exhausted.

Even when visitors try to spare her waning strength and seek to break away, she still holds them as long as she can, questioning them about affairs in the active world from which she is slowly fading.

SECRETARY OF BRITISH TREASURY IN CAPITAL SEEKS WAR DEBT CUT

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Sir Warren Fisher, permanent secretary of the British treasury, and Thomas Jones, secretary to Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald, head of the Labor government in England, have been in Washington for several days, it was learned today, conferring with state department officials. They were accompanied by Alanson B. Houghton of New York, former ambassador to the court of St. James.

Although announcements here stated that the purpose of the visit was to view historic American mansions, private cables advices from London disclosed that their principal mission in this country was to sound out sentiment on the question of a reduction in the war debts.

Mr. Jones is the Col. House of the MacDonald administration. Several weeks before official announcement was made that Prime Minister MacDonald was coming to the United States, Mr. Jones arrived, announcing that he had come to pay some social visits and make a sight-seeing tour of the country. It developed that he made all of the arrangements for Mr. MacDonald's virit.

It was disclosed that he and Sir Warren had passed several weeks in New York as the house guests of Mr. Houghton before coming to Washington the middle of the week. According to normally reliable quarters here, they discussed the subject of debt reductions with the principal New York bankers before sounding out official sentiment on the same subject here.

PLAN TO LOWER COST OF WIVES TO HOLY LAND ARABS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

JERUSALEM, Sept. 13.—That the price of wives of Arab peasants in Palestine, ranging at present from any figure to about $2,500, be reduced to a maximum of $100 is the suggestion of C. F. Strickland, Indian expert on cooperatives deputized by the British government to seek means of improving Arabian economic conditions.

Mr. Strickland found that a great proportion of a peasant's possessions are invested in one or more wives. In one case he learned of a young Arab who sold his land and all his property for $1,600, of which he spent $1,200 for a wife. In another case an Arab had borrowed $400 to buy a wife 14 years before, and was found to be still in debt over his purchase.

By a reduction in the price of wives, Mr. Strickland believes that peasants will be enabled to invest the tremendous saving that would result in the improvement of his primitive methods of cultivation.

REARREST NATIVE FOR DEATH OF U. S. WOMAN IN AFRICA

NAIROBI, Kenya, British East Africa, Sept. 13.—(AP)—The native Mutua Nozmo, originally suspected of having slain Miss Hilda J. Stumpf, American missionary of the African Inland mission, found dead in January, and released for lack of evidence, now is being reëxamined before Magistrate Fazan, with Attorney General MacGregor supervising the prosecution.

Nozmo was rearrested recently upon evidence said to have been gleaned from comparison of his finger prints with marks left at the scene of the tragedy at Kujabe.

Miss Stumpf, who has a brother and a cousin in Pennsylvania, was suffocated and attacked in her lonely mission cottage. She had been a missionary in Africa for 22 years.

CREW RESCUED AS SEA POUNDS SHIP TO PIECES

HONGKONG, China, Sept. 13.—(AP)—A wireless message from H. M. Oiler Pearleaf said that all the crew of the Japanese fishing trawler Ibuki Maru, in distress in Hainan Straits, had been rescued.

Earlier messages from the ship said that 18 men aboard the Ibuki Maru were clinging to the rigging awaiting aid while the vessel broke up fast beneath them under the pitiless pounding of heavy seas.

The Pearleaf was diverted from her course, from Hongkong to Singapore, and hurried to the ship while other vessels stood by.

BUSBY WILL FILED; BULK IS LEFT IN TRUST TO WIDOW

No Estimates Made on Value of Estate.

The will of Leonard A. Busby, president of the Chicago City Railway company, who died last Tuesday, was admitted to probate yesterday by Edwin S. Scheffler, assistant to Probate Judge Henry Horner. Under the terms of the will the bulk of the estate is left in trust to his widow and two children. It provides that a large part of the estate will be given to charities in the event the children die before final distribution of their share.

The document, drawn up three weeks before Mr. Busby's death, was filed with Probate Clerk Mitchell C. Robin by the law firm of Busby, Weber, Miller & Donovan, of which Mr. Busby was an active partner for many years. Members of the firm declined to place any estimate on the value of the estate.

Bequests Are Listed.

All of Mr. Busby's household effects are left to the widow, Mrs. Esther C. B. Busby of 420 Roscoe street. His will leaves his keepsakes to Attorney Harry P. Weber and the late Frank O. Wetmore, banker, who died three weeks ago.

Mrs. Elizabeth Buchanan, a sister, is given $10,000, and two other sisters, Mrs. O. L. Clarke and Mrs. Virginia Albaugh, are left $5,000 each. A number of smaller bequests are left to other relatives.

The remainder of the estate is left in trust to be administered by the First Union Trust and Savings bank for the benefit of the widow and two children, Janet Busby and John Kemp Busby. The children are to receive $25,000 each when they attain the age of 25 and $50,000 each when they are 30 years old.

Two Trusts for Children.

Two trust funds for the benefit of the children had previously been created, according to the will. The will states that should the children die before the distribution of their share of the residuary estate the proceeds will be given to the Ohio Wesleyan university of Delaware, O.; the John Crerar library, the Mary Thompson Hospital for Children, and the Children's Memorial hospital.

Mr. Busby was president of the Chicago City Railway company for 19 years and was president of the Chicago Surface lines from 1914 to 1920. He was a director in numerous corporations and banks.

CHURCHMEN CALL ON DRYS TO FIGHT WET SENTIMENT

Danville, Ill., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Calling on the dry forces of the state to rally for a crusade against wet sentiment in Illinois, laymen of the state conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in their closing sessions here today went on record as favoring a militant campaign for the retention of the 18th amendment.

In adopting the resolution endorsing the prohibition amendment and pledging support to all law enforcing agencies, the laymen's association held "the wisdom of national prohibition has been demonstrated by experience and incontrovertable facts."

The churchmen urged all friends of prohibition to take an active part in the November election to defeat the repeal proposals that will be voted upon. No endorsement of any political candidate was made in the resolution.

BUTLER ACCUSED OF 'PLAYING POLITICS' IN U. S. TEXTILE UNION

NEW YORK, Sept. 13. — (AP) — A charge that supporters of a resolution in favor of a federal law creating a maximum forty-eight hour week for mill employés was "part and parcel of Senator Butler's campaign in Massachusetts" caused a bitter discussion today at the annual convention of the United Textile Workers of America.

The charge was made against members of the committee of the union which introduced the resolution by Chester Shay of Salem, Mass., who earlier had accused former Senator William M. Butler of spending a "slush fund" of $500,000 to win the support of labor.

REBELS PLANNING FLOOD IN CHINA TO HALT ARMY DRIVE

Report Gen. Feng Opening Dikes of Yellow River.

BY JOHN POWELL.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SHANGHAI, Sept. 13.—The Chinese government tonight issued a report which alleged that the Christian general, Feng Yu-Hsiang, is planning to open the dikes of the Yellow river with the object of flooding a large section of northern Honan province near Kaifeng and Chengchow as a means of blocking the advance of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek's army, which is now converging at these two cities.

The report was based on observations made by a government airplane. It said Gen. Feng has a large force working on the canals leading back from the Yellow river, which are now in a flooded condition.

Serious Fighting in Progress.

Serious fighting has been in progress on the Lunghai, Peiping and Hankow railways near Kaifeng and Chengchow since Sept. 5, when Gen. Chiang announced a general drive against Feng.

Gen. Chiang's advance was accompanied by furious air bombing of Kaifeng and Chengchow, which had the effect of driving most of the population of those two cities underground. Schools are functioning only at night.

Warn Against New Régime.

The Chinese government today proclaimed illegal any contracts or concessions granted by the new Peiping government, and also warned foreigners against the purchase of Chinese antiques and art objects. It is alleged here that Gen. Yen is selling articles from the national museum in order to raise war funds.

ENGINEERS THINK MAN CAN SUBDUE THE MISSISSIPPI

Hurley's Experts Believe Cost Is Justified.

BY WILLARD EDWARDS.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Greenville, Miss., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Will the unceasing stream of gold, hundred of millions of dollars of which has been poured into the Mississippi, ever subdue the mighty river into an easily navigable waterway, never menacing in its threat of floods? Engineers in Secretary of War Hurley's party aboard the government steamer Mississippi, which is cruising the river from St. Paul to New Orleans, pondered that question today as the final stages of the expedition were being reached.

On flood control work alone in the lower river, local districts have spent an estimated $300,000,000, with many more millions ready to be piled on the river banks in the form of great levees. The government has spent $175,000,000 to $200,000,000 on navigation and flood control work combined and has several hundreds of millions of dollars more which will be spent where most needed.

Engineers Optimistic.

Admitting that navigation as yet is much handicapped by low water, such as had been found in the present season, and that the flood danger has by no means been curbed, yet the attitude of the secretary of war's engineers is optimistic.

The Mississippi shows unmistakable signs here and there of yielding to the restraining influence of man, they declare. The river still shifts its channel unexpectedly, caves in banks, and builds up sandbars to a lesser extent. The engineers say informally that progress is being made at last and that, with a foothold once gained, there will be more rapid advances in the future.

Added to this is the confident prediction of Maj. Gen. Thomas Q. Ashburn, chairman of the board of the Inland Waterways corporation, that river commerce has just started to show its greatest possibilities. In five years the government barge line has shown an increasing tonnage carried and corresponding higher profits, his records show, and he speaks with enthusiasm of the time when the Chicago market will be opened with the completion of the Illinois waterway and the first great opportunity for heavy river transportation will be offered.

Hurley Plane Escapes Storm.

Some anxiety was caused members of the party late yesterday afternoon when the secretary, aloft in his airplane, inspecting a levee near Helena, Ark., narrowly missed being caught in a severe storm which suddenly arose. The plans landed safely at Clarksdale, Miss., and the secretary proceeded to rejoin the steamer by speed boat.

HOPS FROM JAPAN FOR U. S.

Harold Bromley, who took off with Navigator Harold Gatty for 4,532 mile flight across Pacific, shown with his plane, the City of Tacoma.

Map shows route expected to be followed by Harold Bromley and Harold Gatty, who hopped off at 5:08 o'clock this morning (Japanese time) from Samishiro beach, near Sambongi, Japan, in an effort to fly the Pacific ocean to Tacoma, Wash. The journey, one of the most hazardous ever attempted, will take the airmen along the Kuriles island chain of northern Japan, then over a long water jump to the Aleutian islands, and from there to the mainland. The flyers may take the long water hop from the Aleutians direct to Tacoma or, if weather conditions are unfavorable, may head for Alaska.

ILLINOIS COLLEGE NAME CHANGED TO HONOR COUPLE

Danville, Ill., Sept. 13.—(AP)—The name of Illinois Women's college at Jacksonville, Ill., was changed to McMurray College for Women by unanimous vote of the educational committee at the annual annual Illinois Methodist conference today.

Trustees of the college voted some time ago to make the change in honor of Mr. and Mrs. James E. McMurray, who gave $300,000 to the school for election of two new buildings. Formal change, however, had to be made by the conference, which owns it.

It was provided that whenever the new name is written for a period of ten years, the old name shall be placed in parentheses.

Because of an unexpectedly heavy program of business, it seemed likely that the conference might not adjourn until Monday night.

Luxembourg Princess Will Marry Bavarian Prince

LUXEMBOURG, Sept. 13.—(AP)—The engagement was announced today of Princess Hilda, eldest sister of reigning Grand Duchess Charlotte, and Bavarian Prince Adolph of Schwartzenberg.

HORSES DEFEAT MOTOR TRACTORS IN PLOW CLASSIC

Wheatland Honors Go to Lapp for Third Time.

Homer Lapp, 26 years old, Will county farmer, yesterday for the third consecutive time won the annual plowing championship at Wheatland, six miles southeast of Aurora. He used a single blade plow, driving three horses.

The award is based on the symmetry of the furrow, the conformations, the straightness, the evenness of depth and general neatness. Lapp scored 94 points on the half acre field he plowed and the judge remarked on "the beauty of his rounded furrows."

Second place went to Frank Boardman, with 92 points, and third to Carl Shoger, with 89 points. Schoger was first in the men's tractor plow contest. Both men farm near Wheatland.

Norman Trantock, 18 years old, using a horse drawn plow, won the boys' plowing championship.

Horses Win Over Tractor.

The dramatic feature of the competion was that the horse was pitted against the machine. Lapp, who regularly farms with a tractor, drove his three bays, which he has had for more than 10 years, to win against Boardman, who was operating a tractor. Shoger also plowed with a tractor.

Altogether there were 22 contenders, and 15,000 farmers from every northern Illinois county.

The match is one farmers' fair that continues to be a classic in the hearts of ruralists and townspeople of the vicinity without the noise of the carnival barkers. Row upon row of modern farm equipment, plows, tractors, harvesters, corn pickers and whatnot attracted just as keen interest and comment as any attraction on the grounds. Airplanes taking up well dressed farm folk have added another modern note to the oldest farm festival in northern Illinois.

Farm Women Compete.

Farm women and their daughters during the morning carried armloads of cakes, pies, needlework and other home products to be judged for prizes. Young farm lads proudly held the halters of sleek fat steers and other blooded stock as an enthusiastic crowd eyed the jury that placed them.

Hundreds of women prepared lunch in the big tent where a hungry crowd lined up after seeing the last furrow turned on forty rods of black dirt, which a few minutes before was ankle deep clover stubble. The horse drawn plows—both beast and man laboring quietly under a hot September sun—still held much interest and people flocked across fields to see them holding out sternly against the increasingly popular tractor drawn plows.

At the close of the day women stood back while their prize cakes, cookies and pies were auctioned off to the highest bidders.

HORSE'S WIND WAS AS GOOD AS SELLER'S, BUT HE, ALAS, HAD ASTHMA

Clearfield, Pa., Sept. 13.—(AP)—"Why that horse's wind," said Frank Marasky, thumbing his suspenders, "is as good as mine."

So Percy Axel, whose only doubts were concerned with the animal's breathing, made the purchase. But shortly, Axel discovered the horse had developed the heaves.

In court, where Axel brought suit for damages, he learned that Marasky had not lied. Marasky is suffering from asthma.

Axel lost the suit.

PERSHING IS 70, 12 YEARS AFTER ST. MIHIEL WIN

He Doesn't Mind Growing Older, General Says.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Gen. John J. Pershing today celebrated his seventieth birthday, as well as the twelfth anniversary of the battle of St. Mihiel, where American troops, fighting for the first time in the world war as a distinctly separate army, delivered a crushing blow to German hopes of eventual victory.

Seated at his desk in the office over the entrance to which are printed the words "General of the Armies," the wartime commander of the American expeditionary forces sent to France in 1917 and 1918 joked with newspaper men about his advancing years, read scores of congratulatory telegrams from friends in all parts of the world, and talked a bit in retrospect of the stirring days twelve years ago.

"Just Another Day."

"Certainly I am growing old—by the calendar," Gen Pershing crisply retorted as he motioned his callers to comfortable chairs in the big office he maintains as chairman of the battle monuments commission. "But I do not mind it. I haven't noticed the difference to any extent physically. To me a birthday is just another day gone by, not a milestone. I do not look upon it as an occasion for sadness or rejoicing. I have work to do, and I work on my birthday just the same as on other days."

Callers—most of them general officers or men who had served with him in his active days—found the general moving about as briskly as ever, his shoulders squared and his bearing erect. The general shows his age mostly in his face and in his whitened hair. His blondish mustache, carefully clipped as always, conceals some of the lines about his mouth, but none of his friends could deny that the general looked older than a year ago.

Recalls U. S. Victory.

That one more birthday had been added to his age seemed to occupy the general's attention much less than the fact that today marked the anniversary of the great American victory at St. Mihiel. Pershing recalled this battle with profound respect and admiration "for the boys who made victory possible."

YANCEY SLIGHTLY BURNED IN CRASH ON BAHAMA ISLE

Miami, Fla., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Capt. Lewis A. Yancey, who was slightly burned when his airplane was wrecked yesterday on Exuma island, Bahamas, was en route to Nassau today, aboard the schooner Alice Louise, with two companions who were accompanying him as he returned from a good will flight to Latin America, said a radio message to the Miami Daily News.

The message said the airplane piloted by Yancey left Porto Rico Thursday morning, and passed over Georgetown, Exuma, at 1:30 p. m. Engine trouble developed. A forced landing was made about 12 miles from Georgetown and the plane overturned.

Shortly after the crew members freed themselves from the wrecked plane, an explosion resulted from what was believed to be short circuited wires, and the craft was destroyed.

Accompanying Yancey were Zeh Pouck, radio operator, and Emil Durgin, pilot. They left New York May 14 for a Latin American good will tour and were on their return trip at the time of the accident.

PLAN TO REOPEN MAYWOOD BANK IS TRIAL SEQUEL

Following the conviction Friday of Elmer P. Langguth and Laverne Lindgren, president and cashier of the former People's State bank of Maywood, a move was reported yesterday to reopen the institution in an attempt to restore their losses to depositors. Previous to the verdict returned against the couple, who were found guilty of making false statements to bank examiners, it was said that such negotiations had been on foot.

Attorneys for the defendants made a motion for a new trial, which is to be heard by Judge Otto Kerner on Oct. 4. Meanwhile, attorneys for Langguth and Miss Lindgren said yesterday, their clients are coöperating with the depositors' committee by explaining details of the transactions at the bank.

DRY UP POLAND; ANTI-PILSUDSKI RIOTS FEARED

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

WARSAW, Sept. 13.—Authorities of twenty cities have ordered Poland bone dry for forty-eight hours in anticipation of anti-government demonstrations planned for tomorrow. Extraordinary precautions have been taken everywhere. In Warsaw alone 2,000 policemen and armored cars will patrol the streets.

In an interview, which will be published tomorrow, Marshal Pilsudski explains the arrest of nineteen former deputies, stating the arrested men are now plain citizens and that he will not tolerate their escape from punishment "as anarchy might result." The opposition press charges that the prisoners are being held in a fortress and are mistreated. It claims their heads have been shaved and their food is bad.

GUNMEN BATTLE ON GOTHAM STREET BUT NO ONE IS INJURED

New York, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Revolvers and submachine guns spat fire today from the hands of gangsters in an automobile battle on Carpenter avenue, the Bronx.

No one was hurt in the conflict, although forty bullets left their traces in the walls, verandas, parlors and dining rooms of the neighborhood.

According to witnesses three men in each auto exchanged shots for a quarter of a block until a punctured tire halted one of the cars and its occupants dashed for safety. According to Joseph Armanto, found cowering in a nearby cellar, he was the sole occupant of the auto and the innocent victim of an inexplicable attack.

REVEAL 3 GUARD OFFICERS NAMED IN KRAFT INQUIRY

U. S. Investigator's Visit to Officials Told.

Suspension of two other officers of the 202d coast artillery, Illinois National Guard, was recommended to Gov. Emmerson last March when a federal investigator asked that Col. Charles J. Kraft be relieved of command. This was disclosed yesterday.

One of these officers was a lieutenant colonel and the other a captain. Neither was suspended, and the lieutenant colonel was the recipient of honors shortly after Col. Kraft was suspended.

It was reported that a federal investigator went to Gov. Emmerson with the findings which resulted in the indictment of Col. Kraft and the revelation of a $200,000 Illinois National Guard scandal. He requested that Kraft and the other two officers be relieved.

Governor Told of Evidence.

The governor was informed, it is reported, that the evidence showed that others besides Col. Kraft were involved in the alleged defalcations. Maj. Gen. Roy D. Keehn, commander of the guard, was present at the conference, it is reported, and both Gen. Keehn and the governor, according to the reports, agreed that all three officers accused should be relieved.

Shortly after the conference, however, Gen. Keehn informed the federal investigator that a certain officer had expressed "the highest confidence" in the integrity of the captain and the lieutenant colonel and that only Col. Kraft would be suspended, according to the reports.

Col. Kraft then was suspended by Col. Richings J. Shand, acting adjutant general, and a board of inquiry was appointed which permitted Col. Kraft to resign, retaining his rank. Announcement of the acceptance of the resignation was not made until the day after the return of the federal indictment.

Effort to Remove Investigator.

Federal officials yesterday also were in possession of evidence purporting to show that efforts were made to remove Arthur R. Johnson, army investigator, from an Illinois National Guard scandal case at Springfield as well as from the Kraft case.

It had previously been reported that Lieut. Col. C. L. Corbin, commander of the army quartermaster depot, told Johnson to "leave that Kraft case alone and not make any report to the United States attorney's office."

At about this time Johnson, it is reported, was called to Springfield to testify before the federal grand jury, and Col. Corbin told him "the army doesn't give a damn about losing a couple of horses."

Five Indicted at Springfield.

Three officers and two feed store dealers were indicted at Springfield, charged with abstracting $25,000 in federal property, including large quantities of army hay and oats and seven horses allocated to the 160th cavalry. In addition, it was alleged that several thousand dollars in federal funds were embezzled through the padding of drill payrolls.

Col. Corbin was reported to have told Johnson that state officials were insistent that he be taken off the investigations. United States Attorney Johnson put the investigator under subpoena to prevent his removal and when Johnson returned to the quartermaster depot he was demoted to a clerical rôle. The war department, however, has ordered his reinstatement as an investigator.

Robs Woman in Office; Caught 10 Minutes Later

Within ten minutes after he entered a lawyer's office at 7500 Cottage Grove avenue and robbed Mrs. Evelyn May, 25 years old, 6158 Eberhart avenue, the secretary, of jewelry valued at $1,000, Andrew Calber, 37 years old, 6723 Eberhart avenue, was captured yesterday by the Grand Crossing police.

NAMED IN HOLDUP

FRED BURKE.

IDENTIFY BURKE AS BANK ROBBER IN NEW JERSEY

Employes Pick Photograph in Rogue's Gallery.

New York, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Employés of the Merchants Trust company of Paterson, N. J., today identified the photograph of Fred Burke of Chicago, known to the police as "the worst desperado since Jesse James," as one of the three men who held up the bank Wednesday and escaped with $20,000.

Two women and two men employés of the bank were locked in the vault by the holdup men, who walked leisurely out of the bank and fled in a waiting car.

The bank employés looked over a number of rogues' gallery pictures shown them by the Paterson police and operatives of the William J. Burns Detective agency, and identified Burke as one of the robbers. They tentatively identified a second robber as resembling the photograph of August Winkler, an ex-convict of Kansas City.

$101,000 in Rewards.

Burke has been sought by the police of other cities for more than a year, and his description is on file in every police station in the country. Rewards totaling $101,000 are on his head. Eight states and the federal government have serious charges pending against him, and he is said to have at least twenty notches on his gun. The police say he has done "jobs" for the Capone organization in Chicago and that he was under their protection.

The Chicago police call him a cold-blooded killer. They say he was one of the two men who, disguised in policemen's uniforms, used machine guns to mow down seven members of the Moran gang in the massacre on St. Valentine's day, 1929. They charge him also with having murdered a traffic policeman in St. Joseph, Mo., a few months ago.

Wanted for Murders.

Burke is wanted in Louisville, Ky., for shooting a cashier in a bank robbery. Toledo, O., wants him for killing a policeman in a holdup. The federal government wants him for a national bank robbery.

He is wanted in Wisconsin for a $350,000 bank robbery and in Detroit for the killing of two men in a machine gun murder. Banks in Peru, Ind.; Cadillac, Mich., and Cincinnati and Hamilton, O., are after him for holdups.

U. S. HUNTS FOR BROKERS ON MAIL FRAUD CHARGES

The federal government is investigating Douglas White & Co., brokerage house, which operated at 10 South La Salle street until the secretary of state revoked its license on Friday, Assistant United States Attorney Joseph Struett said yesterday.

Operators of the concern, which is alleged to have swindled investors out of many thousands of dollars, are being sought on charges of using the mails to defraud, Mr. Struett said. Douglas White, if there is such a man, and all his assistants have fled, according to the investors' protective bureau, and criminal action by state authorities is being held up pending their apprehension.

The concern was said to have solicited investments by mail in all middle western states except Illinois. A rise of from 50 to 150 points in General Electric was assured prospective investors, who were induced to buy on margin, and no stock was ever delivered, it is charged. Struett said a Kentucky man complained of losing $10,500. Nine telephones were used at the concern's room at 155 East Superior street, where "high pressure" salesmen ran up a $3,500 telephone bill in eight days.

NAB 4 IN HUNT FOR 2 KILLERS OF DRUGGIST

In an effort to round up the slayers of Willis Fiddelke, 25 year old druggist, shot in the head as he lay on the floor of his store at 6560 South Western avenue Wednesday night, police yesterday made four arrests.

Lieut. William Blaul of the state's attorney's office picked up two men at 12th and Newberry streets who will be viewed by witnesses. They gave the names of John Carino, 1002 Cypress street, and John Paldo, 1027 South Damen avenue.

Sergts. William Sexton and W. R. Wall of the Chicago Lawn station, after a block's chase, took into custody Emil Verlotti, who said first he lived at 1212 West Huron street and later at 5212 Bloomingdale road, and Joseph Bariano, who is said to use an alias, La Monika. He also gave two addresses, one at 631 South Laflin street and the other at 9713 Irving Park boulevard. They threw away two guns, which were recovered, according to the police. The sergeants captured them at 16th street and Western avenue. The police said the men offered them $1,000 for their release.

ENGLISH AUTHOR ASKS BAN OF PLAY ON HER SEX NOVEL

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Sept. 13.—Radclyffe Hall's novel "The Well of Loneliness" has been dramatized and produced here by Willette Kershaw without the English authoress' permission and the French authorities today were asked to ban the performance. The novel, the story of a homosexualist, was banned in England, but not in America. A writ was served notifying the American actress that Miss Hall is seeking heavy damages.

Miss Kershaw immediately applied for permission to continue the performances, which have been attracting crowded houses of all sorts of queer persons and American tourists, while the case is fought out in the courts. Simultaneously the management of the theater discovered four English girl stenographers in the balcony during a matinee copying the dialogue of the play by shorthand. They explained that they were hired to transcribe the play by Miss Hall's legal representative here.

Miss Kershaw asserts that she has a signed contract from Miss Hall for the production of her dramatization of her novel. The authoress' lawyer declares that Miss Hall does not consider Miss Kershaw suitable to portray the rôle of the heroine.

ARMY AND NAVY BUDGETS FOR '32 MAY BE SLASHED

White House Orders Cut in 1931 Expenditures.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Hearings under auspices of the director of the budget in the next month will largely determine whether national defense expenditures are to be slashed for the 1932 fiscal year.

Retrenchment orders issued from the White House several weeks ago have resulted in substantial cuts in the 715 millions appropriated for the 1931 expenditures of the war and navy departments. Army and navy officers anticipate strong pressure will be brought to carry these reductions on into the next fiscal year.

Estimate Cut Expected.

It is reported a move is to be made to cut the naval estimates as submitted to the bureau of the budget by Secretary of the Navy Charles Francis Adams. The figure submitted by Mr. Adams corresponded roughly with the appropriations voted for the current year, 377 million dollars in round numbers. About $15,000,000 will be cut from the current year's expenditures and it is reported a move will be made to hold the 1932 naval budget down to actual expenditures in 1931.

The army is cutting overhead costs for this fiscal year as a part of its retrenchment program.

Every army post commander has been ordered to hold expenditures down below the figures supplied by the appropriation bill. The army air corps also has been hit. Officers have been instructed to restrict flying hours and cuts have been made in funds supplied for air corps housing. The air corps has asked $45,000,000 for 1932, but indications are this figure will be reduced.

Service Register Comments.

The Army and Navy Register, in commenting today on reports that the secretary of war and secretary of the navy had received orders from President Hoover directing them to limit cash withdrawals from the treasury to amounts considerably below those of the appropriations made for this fiscal year, said:

"Officers are loath to discuss this subject, most of them going no farther than to admit the existence of the curtail orders. In view of the fact there can be no reduction of money disbursement on account of the officer personnel and the civil service employés, it is obvious the cut must be applied in other directions.

Personnel May Be Cut.

"It is understood that it will be necessary to reduce the enlisted personnel of the army by several thousand men, and the naval establishment (navy and marine corps) by about the same number, this being effective, presumably, by reducing the acceptance of new recruits. Already instructions have gone forth for the closing of a number of recruiting stations.

"There necessarily will be radical limitation on transportation, on account of the change of stations of officers and enlisted men, and this is reflected even now in orders lengthening the tours of duties of personnel on certain foreign stations."

MAN WHO CAME TO U. S. IN CRATE WEDS IN GOTHAM

New York, Sept. 13.—(AP)—Hans Thoeing, who came to the United States in a packing case, was married today to Lotti Ohse, who also comes from Germany but who came in a more conventional fashion.

Two years ago Thoeing gave some boys a few pennies to pack him into a crate on the docks at Hamburg and carry him aboard the liner Cleveland, bound for New York. He lived inside on bread and water.

When the ship reached New York and the crate was being hoisted ashore the crane broke, the crate dropped, and there was Hans.

Held for deportation, he was aided by Americans who thought such ingeniousness deserved reward, and was admitted to the United States.

Since then he has done well enough in his adopted country to bring his fiancé from Duisberg, Germany, to furnish a six room apartment in New York, and to be married—which he was, blushingly, at the municipal chapel today.

ADOLPHUS BUSCH AND WIDOW WED IN DALLAS, TEX.

Dallas, Tex., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Adolphus Busch III, of St. Louis and Mrs. Catherine Milliken Bowen of Dallas were married today. Busch is vice president of Anheuser-Busch, Inc.

Dr. William M. Anderson, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, read the ceremony in the presence of a few friends at the Adolphus hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Busch left for Cooperstown, N. Y., where the Busch summer home is located.

The bride is a member of an old and widely known Texas family. She is a granddaughter of the late Barnett Gibbs, former lieutenant governor of Texas. She is a daughter of Dr. S. E. Milliken. Her mother is now Mrs. E. Dick Slaughter.

DRY ARMY RAIDS MUNCIE; SEIZES 20 SMALL FRY

Federal Agents Stage Surprise Swoop.

Muncie, Ind., Sept. 13.—Forty-three federal prohibition officers and thirty plain clothes policemen under the direction of F. J. Herbert, prohibition administrator of the seventh district, swarmed down upon local liquor law violators late last night and today with 31 warrants and made about twenty arrests. Some of those for whom warrants were issued had run away and others were not arrested because of faulty descriptions in the affidavits of the property that was to have been raided.

Four women are among the prisoners, most of whom today entered pleas of not guilty to charges of making specific sales, illegal possession, or maintaining nuisances. The majority were arraigned in City and Circuit courts, but some chronic offenders will be taken into the United States District court at Indianapolis.

All but one of those arrested pleaded not guilty and either were placed in jail or were released under bonds of $1,000 each. One pleaded guilty to a charge of illegal possession, but has not been sentenced.

VILLAGERS STONE TO DEATH MAN WHO MURDERED 3

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Sept. 13.—Angry villagers of Salonta in Transylvania today stoned Albert Joseph, 25 year old peasant, to death after he had killed his father, mother, and a neighbor with a spade and then set fire to the homestead.

After the crime Joseph fled down the village street into the country. Villagers hearing the cries of the dying victims started in pursuit. He was caught three miles away and dragged into town.

After beating him unconscious, they formed a wide circle and stoned him to death.

34 GARDENERS ARE AWARDED PLACES ON TRIBUNE HONOR ROLL

Thirty-four gardeners who will receive gold framed certificates indicating they have been placed on THE TRIBUNE'S first semi-annual flower garden roll of honor for "meritorious planning, planting, and development," are listed in the metropolitan sections of today's SUNDAY TRIBUNE in the north, west and south metropolitan divisions.

Those who live in the northwest and southwest metropolitan areas of Chicago will find the list of gardeners in their next Sunday's paper in the metropolitan sections. Lack of space prevented the list being published for each of the five divisions represented in the project.

In addition to the 34 named as honor roll gardeners with outstanding fall flower plantings, 17 gardens have been given honorable mention. These gardeners are expected to place on the honor roll next spring or next fall. Ballots will be printed next spring in time for nominations to the next honor roll.

JULY SAILINGS SHOW DECLINE FROM LAST YEAR

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—The number of tourists leaving America for Europe during July of this year was somewhat smaller than the previous year, according to bureau of immigration figures made public today. During July, 1930, 55,336 Americans left this country for foreign lands, while in July, 1929, the number was 56,339, or 1,000 more. The majority of those leaving during July this year, as last year, were women.

A total of 29,789 aliens were admitted to the United States the first month of the fiscal year. Only 13,323 of these were listed as immigrants with permanent residence as their object. The remainder were tourists or temporary visitors.

Aliens debarred from the United States numbered 881 in July, the principal cause for debarment being failure to present proper immigration visa. Undesirable aliens deported from this country for various reasons under the immigration law numbered 1,440 during July.

BOARD OF TRADE MEN TALK WITH HYDE IN CAPITAL

Chicago Party Confers on Rule Changes.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Four representatives of the Chicago Board of Trade conferred with Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde today upon proposed changes in the rules of the board and the regulations of the department of agriculture with a view to providing more equitable trading conditions.

At the close of the conference, which lasted nearly two hours, the following formal statement was issued:

"The conference today is one of a series begun at the request of the department of agriculture. The discussions have concerned the possibilities of changes in the rules of the Chicago Board of Trade and of the regulations of this department with a view to improving the rules so as to make conditions of trading more equitable as between the buyer and seller. The whole matter is still in the conference stage. There is nothing at this time that can be definitely announced."

Four Speak for Board.

The spokesmen for the Board of Trade were James C. Murray, vice president of the Quaker Oats company; Peter B Carey, vice president of the board; Richard F. Uhlman of the Uhlman Grain company, and Fred H. Clutton, secretary of the Board of Trade.

Also participating in the conference were Chairman Alexander Legge of the federal farm board and Nils A. Olsen, chief of the bureau of agricultural economics of the department of agriculture.

The board of trade delegation refused to discuss the developments in the conference aside from acquiescing in the formal statement, while Mr. Legge avoided questions with the remark, "Wait 'til congress convenes and you'll have something."

Hyde Refers to Rules.

Secretary Hyde explained that a number of rules of the department are being strenuously objected to by the board of trade members, in particular that requiring the reporting of purchases and sales. The contention of the board of trade is that these rules hamper free and equitable trading.

"The board wants us to do several things and there are several things we want the board to do," Mr. Hyde said. "The board, like other trading bodies, is in a process of evolution and naturally there are changes to be made and troubles to iron out. I think we will be able to make any changes necessary to fair trading conditions without any action by congress."

Mr. Hyde said that his first conference on the Board of Trade regulations occurred ten days ago when he saw the president of the Chicago Board of Trade. He added that there will probably be other conferences in the near future.

SHOT TO DEATH BY WIFE AS HE THREATENS HER

August Ferrine, 40 years old, a house painter, was shot and killed last night by his wife, Lucy, 33 years old, in the bathroom of their home at 1142 Eggleston avenue. She told the Kensington police that every Saturday pay day he got intoxicated and beat her.

"I put up with it," she said, "on account of the three children, but last night when he came home he began cursing and striking me in their presence. I pleaded with him not to do that. The baby is 4 years old and the oldest is only 13. He seized a hatchet and said: 'I'll show you.' I ran into a bedroom and got his revolver and emptied it at him."

Ferrine was shot once in the head and five times in the chest. Mrs. Ferrine telephoned the Kensington police and gave herself up.

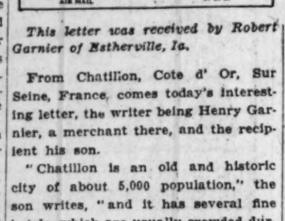
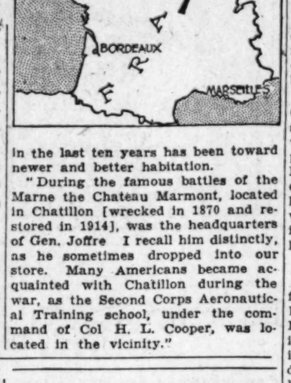
FROM CHATILLON, FRANCE

(Picture in rotogravure section.)



This letter was received by Robert Garnier of Estherville, Ia.



From Chatillon, Cote d' Or, Sur Seine, France, comes today's interesting letter, the writer being Henry Garnier, a merchant there, and the recipient his son.

"Chatillon is an old and historic city of about 5,000 population," the son writes, "and it has several fine hotels, which are usually crowded during the touring season. The city contains many landmarks of ancient times and has splendid springs of unusually pure water. The older ruins in the city are not receiving the preservation and exploitation one might expect, since the tendency of France in the last ten years has been toward newer and better habitation.

"During the famous battles of the Marne the Chateau Marmont, located in Chatillon [wrecked in 1870 and restored in 1914], was the headquarters of Gen. Joffre I recall him distinctly, as he sometimes dropped into our store. Many Americans became acquainted with Chatillon during the war, as the Second Corps Aeronautical Training school, under the command of Col H. L. Cooper, was located in the vicinity."

WOMEN TELL OF CLIMBS TO BUSINESS PEAKS

Give Stories of Success at Zonta Meeting.

Tradition has assumed that the successful business man paved his way to fame by crying his wares on freezing city streets as a poorly clad newsie. How a woman rises to success was told yesterday by two board members of Zonta International, honorary group of women executives and business owners.

They are Mrs. Katherine Maddux, Chicago, a grandmother, who claims a unique place in women's business world as an executive in the meat packing business, and Mrs. Grace Montgomery Bean, of Toledo, who became a pioneer in personnel work after her soldier husband died in the world war. Both attended the board meeting of Zonta at the Edgewater Beach hotel.

Path Not Easy One.

"If you think the path to success for women is paved with roses just look at my gray hair," said Mrs. Bean beginning her story. Two women in the circle nodded their white heads in quick approval. Their stories indicated that, contrary to men's meager business beginnings, women do not start a business career as a shivering match girl.

"If a woman is willing to work and does not shirk hard labor, she will become a business success," said Mrs. Maddux in telling of her 30 years in business. "There have been times when I though I could never get done the tasks assigned to me, but I did. And such were the times when opportunity knocked loudest."

Mrs. Maddux started as a stenographer when a business career was thought to invite a girl only to the way of the devil, and school teaching was regarded the only profession for a lady.

Starts at $6 a Week.

"I made $6 a week when $8 was considered a good salary," Mrs. Maddux continued. "When I was a child business appealed to me as something ideal. I longed to be a real business woman some day. I lived in a small country town where 'business women' were heard of but never seen. My mother thought that if I must earn a living, certainly there was no way to do it except by teaching school.

"I married three years after I took up a commercial career and when my baby was seven weeks old I found it necessary to earn our bread and butter. So I went back to stenography in government service. In 1918, after the federal trade commission had an adverse report in 1916 about meat packing, I joined Armour's. I had the job of telling the public that meat packers were not so bad after all. I've been connected with the business ever since and am now an associate editor of National Provisioners, meat industry trade publication.

Opportunity for Older Women.

"It is my belief, after 30 years of observation that there is a great opportunity for the older woman in business. When men want assistants they want older women with experience. A woman doesn't have to start from the bottom. If she is adaptable she can go into business and succeed within ten years."

Mrs. Bean decided to enter business after the death of her husband, a lieutenant who died a day short of his landing in France. Before that she had been supervisor of retarded children in Toledo public schools for eight years.

"I liked people, and I decided that if I must handle people I would rather handle the animate rather than the inanimate," explained Mrs. Bean. I organized the personnel work for La Salle & Koch Co., Detroit. I have 1,200 persons under my supervision. I hire and fire both men and women—do all the interviewing. Now days we grade efficiency and production, which calls for good judgment of employes."

WIFE'S ELOPEMENT WITH BOSS BALKED BY ORDER OF COURT

Oklahoma City, Okla., Sept. 13.—[U. P.]—A court order restraining Mrs. Bernice Green from eloping with her employer, A. A. Wallace, was obtained today by Mrs. Green's husband.

Green charged his wife planned to go to Texas with Wallace, in whose real estate office she is employed as secretary.

The injunction was issued after the husband filed a petition asking $25,000 from Wallace for alleged alienation of Mrs. Green's affections. The Greens were married Sept. 11, 1929.

HE DRINKS 2 QUARTS OF BEER IN UNDER 23 SECONDS; WINS PRIZE

El Paso, Tex., Sept. 13.—[U. P.]—Thirty-one men and a woman competed in Juarez today for the beer drinking championship. J. A. Dent, 40, of D'Lo, Miss., won. He drank slightly more than half a gallon in 22 3-5 seconds.

Mr. Dent said he inherited his ability from his father.

"He's a better drinker than I am," Dent declared, "but he leans to endurance instead of speed."

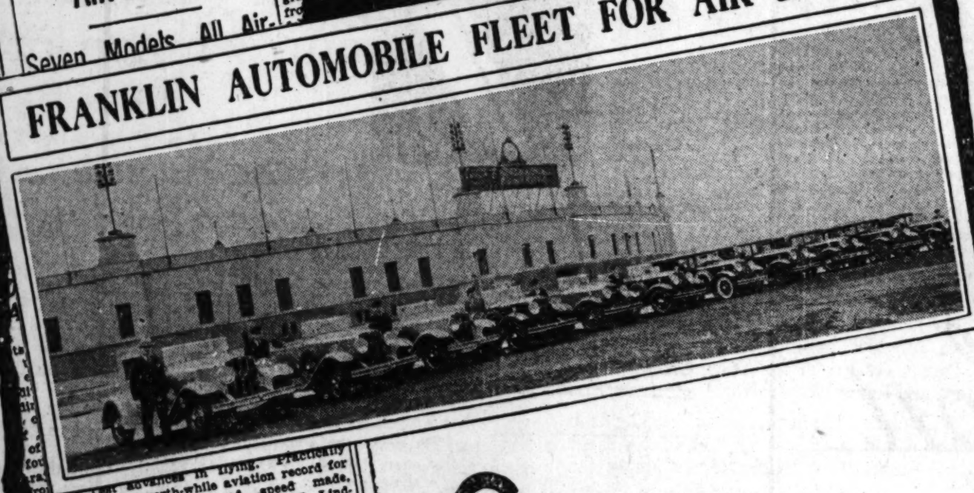
Seven Models All Air-

FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE FLEET FOR AIR RACES



every worth-while aviation record for both endurance and speed made, starting with Col. Charles H. Lindbergh's crossing of the Atlantic, has been accomplished with air-cooled motors.

Paralleling the aeronautical records, Franklin cars powered with airplane type air-cooled engines have, during this same time, won and held today virtually every American road record recognized as a worthy test for the endurance, speed and dependability of any type of internal combustion engine.

The fleet of Franklin cars being used for the air races includes roadsters, touring cars, five and seven passenger sedans and a convertible town car.

Save up to $1175 on these FRANKLIN Air Race Cars

Thirty-five brand new Franklin Automobiles—roadsters, five and seven passenger phaetons and sedans, limousines and town cars—were used as official cars to transport Aviators, Army, Navy and Marine Corps Officers and Race Officials during the National Air Races. Many of them made only one trip a day between the Loop and Curtiss-Reynolds Airport. None were driven over a thousand miles. Experienced chauffeurs were at the wheel of every one of these cars.

You cannot tell these automobiles from new ones. Yet the prices have been drastically cut—in some instances as much as $1175.00—for it is the policy of the Franklin Automobile Co. that no car which has had road service shall be represented or sold as a new automobile.

You know the Franklin airplane type air-cooled engine is the most powerful type of motor built. It is this motor which has successfully flown an airplane and captured practically every worthwhile American road record for speed and endurance.

Among these cars are both standard and special colors and upholstering, wire and wood wheel equipment.

If you have been looking forward to the day when you could own a Franklin, grasp this opportunity. Come and see these cars. Drive them. Learn for yourself why Franklin owners are such great boosters, enjoy such trouble-free and comfortable motoring.

Everyone of these thirty-five automobiles carries our standard new car guarantee and service. The great saving in cost to you is the only difference between these Franklin cars and any other new automobile in our stock.

Come in today. Your present car taken in trade. Terms can be arranged so you may pay out of income over a long period of time.

GERMAN 'GERARD' PICKS 18 WHO CONTROL NATION

7 "Bluebloods" Listed; Bankers on Top.

BY ANN SOMERS HOUSE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

COLOGNE, Sept. 13.—Who are the "fifty-nine" who rule Germany? A high official of Duesseldorf, capital of Germany's biggest industries, posed as a German James W. Gerard today and named whom he thinks control German destinies. Since Germany is smaller than the United States he guessed 18 rulers would do instead of the American 59. None holds public office. Few of the eighteen have ever bothered about sitting in the reichstag. But, between them, they clutch the scepter of all Germany's affairs as stoutly in their fists as once did William II, of Hohenzollern, this leader insists, listing them as follows:

Arthur von Gwinner, Jacob Goldschmidt, Fritz Thyssen, Albert Voegler, Gustav Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach, Emil Kirdorf, Conrad von Borsig, Peter Kloeckner, Hugo Junkers, Carl von Siemens, Carl Duisberg, Carl Bosch, Alfred Hugenberg, the Ullstein brothers, Prince Hatzfeld, Prince Henckel-Donnersmarck, Prince Hohenlohe-Oehringen.

Seven Are Noblemen.

A couple more might be cited, but these are the best known. Of the 18 rulers, seven are noblemen.

Jacob Goldschmidt and Arthur von Gwinner are two of Germany's long galaxy of financiers. Ever since the middle of last century, when practically all of Germany's leading banks were founded, bankers have had a big finger in the country's political pie. The Deutsche bank, under Arthur von Gwinner, financed the Bagdad railway which got the fatherland into trouble with Great Britain.

Married Bertha Krupp.

Von Gwinner also had German capital pump oil from the Roumanian earth. He is the man who claimed "that you've got to have genius to borrow money properly." Jacob Goldschmidt heads the Darmstaedter und National bank, a rugged self-made man with a vision, who forced the Hamburg-American line into a merger with the humble Austral-Kosmos line.

Gustav von Bohlen und Halbach, whose grandfather fought under Carl Schurz in the civil war, married Bertha Krupp of the Krupp millions. Von Bohlen added his wife's name to his own and started manufacturing the "Dicke Bertha" of war fame. His wartime equipment, worth $250,000,000, was destroyed under the treaty of Versailles, but Krupp von Bohlen is prosperous once more as a sort of German "International Harvester." Around 70,000 men work for him.

Fritz Thyssen, scion of an untitled Rhinelan] industrial dynasty, and Albert Voegler, reparations expert, head Germany's steel trust, "Vereinigte Stahlwerke." The trust holds 85 per cent of all money invested in the German steel industry. Emil Kirdorf owns a goodly slice of that steel trust capital. Conrad von Borsig and Peter Kloekner own iron works and coal mines. Hugo Junkers makes the best German airplanes and sent the "Bremen" on the first east-west hop across the Atlantic.

Two expert chemists started a new era in modern warfare when they concocted poison gas. Carl Duisberg and Carl Bosch built up Germany's giant dye trust, I. G. Farbenindustrie. With scientific aloofness they manufactured dyes, pharmacy products and poison gases simultaneously. Their "dye trust" has swallowed 96 per cent of all German chemical factories and digests 91 per cent of all German capital in this industry.

Carl von Siemens, son of Germany's Thomas A. Edison, Werner Siemens, controls now the Siemens "konzern," an electricity combine, which often cooperates with Westinghouse. The German rival trust, A. E. G., allied with General Electric, was headed until two years ago by Felix Deutsch, who died, in 1928, a millionaire.

Royal Coal Mine Owners.

Hungenberg, the world's best advertised newspaper publisher, some say is Germany's coming Mussolini. He makes or mars public opinion as he floods three fourths of the German press with news from his agencies and lavishes money on his "Ufa" films. Some say, too, he is a monarchist. His strongest rivals are the Ullstein brothers, who publish Germany's leading Republican papers.

Three blue blooded industrialists, Prince Henckel-Donnersmarck, Prince Hohenlohe-Oehringen and Prince Hatzfield, inherited their Silesian coal mines, metal works and country estates from feudal fathers. Silesia's aristocratic magnates of industry were close rivals of Rhineland's plebeian industrialists till Upper Silesia was separated from Germany and became part of Poland. These princes now are decisive factors in Polish-German relations.

FRENCH UNIVERSITY ON ART OF DRESSMAKING OPENS TOMORROW

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Sept. 13. — The leading French authorities on costume design and history will be called in for consultation on the art and science of clothing the feminine form when the world's first university of fashion—post-graduate school in dressmaking—opens here Monday.

Forty students of a dozen nationalities, who are expected to develop into ambassadresses from the French dressmaking industry to the world, have enrolled for the initial two year course under the direction of Mme. Rene Jean. M. Gerber, director of Callot Seurs and president of the couturiers' syndicate, has received applications from all over the world.

Hitherto foreign students were able to learn the profession only by obtaining employment in large Paris establishments, where the superiors were too busy to teach and the only instruction was haphazard. The new school offers a practical course in the history of costume design since medieval times.

ILLINOIS LABOR CHIEFS TO MEET AT SPRINGFIELD

State Convention Will Open Tomorrow.

BY THOMAS WREN.

Springfield this week will be the center of Illinois trade union activities and labor's interest in the grand jury investigation of Chicago racketeers will be temporarily shelved until after adjournment of the annual convention of the Illinois Federation of Labor a week hence.

The convention will open tomorrow, and it is expected more than 400 labor representatives will attend. Chicago labor officials said important economic problems, including unemployment, are scheduled for discussion.

Olander Will Preside.

Victor A. Olander, secretary-treasurer of the state federation, will handle the business affairs of the meeting and will also preside as chairman. Olander is considered among the foremost authorities on economics in the American labor movement. He will endeavor at the Springfield convention to arrange a truce between the warring factions of the Illinois coal miners.

Chicago labor officials have received reports of internal differences among officials of the outlaw mine union. This organization was launched last March in defiance of the American Federation of Labor and the regular United Mine Workers of America.

One of its sponsors is John Walker, who resigned as president of the state federation to become treasurer of the new union. Frank Farrington, former president of the Illinois miners, is another sponsor.

Walker Disappointed, Report.

Walker and his followers are said to be disappointed at results obtained thus far. When the rebel miners met at Springfield and elected Alex Howat, president, they expected him to swing all recalcitrant factions into line. They reasoned Howat should be equal to the task because of his association a few years ago with William Z. Foster, leader of the 1919 steel strike and the apostle of communism in America. There is rumor that Howat will be ousted and some progressive given his place.

Chicago labor representatives declare that since the new rump union began to wane in popularity and finances, its sponsors have decided to see a new administration of the international union. Harry Fishwick has announced his resignation as president of the Illinois miners. It is said this job will go to Walker or Farrington. Labor leaders consider Farrington an efficient executive, but doubt if he can overcome prejudice developed when he resigned the presidency of the Illinois union in 1926 to accept a $25,000 a year position with the Peabody coal interests.

MRS. LOTTIE O'NEILL TO FILE PETITION IN SENATE RACE MONDAY

Downers Grove, Ill., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill, dry candidate for the United States senate, will file her petition to be included on the November ballot with the secretary of state Monday, she said tonight. Mrs. O'Neill would not discuss her campaign or platform, promising a statement Monday. Her principal rivals for the senatorial berth are James Hamilton Lewis, Democrat and wet, and Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, Republican, personally dry, but pledged to abide by the results of the prohibition referendum.

BEGIN STREET JOB TOMORROW WITH GAS TAX MONEY

The first actual construction work to be done on through streets in Chicago with funds from the state gasoline tax will be started tomorrow morning at 95th street and Cottage Grove avenue. The contract calls for a 40 foot pavement from Cottage Grove to Yates avenue. At 11 o'clock in the morning, ceremonies will be held at 95th street and Cottage Grove avenue by south side civic organizations. Officials of the state, county and city have been invited to attend.

EIGHT GANGSTERS HUNTED IN DEATH OF YOUNG NURSE

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 13.—(AP)—On information given by Philadelphia police Montgomery county authorities today had warrants issued for eight men, described as Philadelphia gangsters, in connection with the killing of Mrs. Ruth Radler, 27 year old divorcée and former Philadelphia and Chicago nurse.

Mrs. Radler was found in a dying condition on a lonely road near Ambler, a suburb, last Tuesday. She died several hours later in a hospital from a bullet wound in the back of her head. In addition to the wound she had suffered cuts and bruises on her limbs and authorities expressed the opinion she had been beaten and shot and thrown out of an automobile at the lonely spot.

Police said they had learned that Thomas Lambert, a University of Pennsylvania student who had given them clews to Mrs. Radler's killing, has received a threatening letter and had left the city. Lambert gave investigators a description of a man seen at Mrs. Radler's apartment several hours before she was found slain.

District Attorney Frank X. Reninger received the report of the coroner's physician who performed an autopsy on the woman's body. The report states she had been killed with a bullet from a .22 calibre revolver after a struggle.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—A frail little white cockleshell, carrying aloft enough canvas to make tents for two armies of Arabs, slid out of the mists of the Atlantic late this afternoon.

Two minutes and 52 seconds later another little shell, this one green, surrounded by billowing white canvas, followed.

The first race of the 1930 series for the America's cup was ended. The Enterprise, American defender, skippered by Harold Vanderbilt, had defeated Shamrock V., the fifth boat Sir Thomas Lipton has sent over in his effort to lift the cup won by the America in 1851, and defended by American yachts and sailors ever since.

Three More Races to Go.

Three more victories in the 1930 series of races and the cup will remain in American possession until another challenger appears.

Fourteen times the British have tried for the trophy and fourteen times they have lost.

Sir Thomas Lipton, the Scotch-Irishman who began his fortunes in America as a boy, has made the last five trials. His first Shamrock came over in 1899 and his Shamrock IV. in 1920.

The race today was sailed over a 21 mile leeward and windward course off Newport; 15 miles straight out into the Atlantic; then round about and straight back. Light winds and fog during the early reaches kept the speed down, but it did not keep down the interest.

An Armada of Yachts.

There must have been a hundred big white and black and gray yachts scattered along the course like huge brood hens, and in their foaming wakes trailed many hundreds of little craft, squeaking and sputtering and ducking in under the lee of the larger boats.

Probably a billion dollars in yachts, give or take a million, scrambled here and there after the sailing boats.

In mid-harbor was the great Morgan yacht Corsair, the finest privately owned yacht afloat. Great and black and brightly trimmed in gold, with its low running decks and its canvas canopies of tan, it took the breath away with its beauty, and the brightly clad women and the bluecoated and white trousered gentlemen aboard looked like the full definition of luxury, as luxury is defined by the late Mr. Webster.

A few hundred feet from her, and billing into the lee of the Rhode Island headlands, was Vincent Astor's Nourmahal. He calls her his little boat, but she must be more than 200 feet long.

Plebeian Excursion Boats.

Round about were excursion boats packed to the guards like bleachers at a baseball game. Where the yachts were dignified, the excursion boats' passengers were out for a good time and, like the bleacherites, they yelled and cheered and whooped.

When the racers were towed away from their moorings in Brenton Cove, landlocked like the ear of an oyster in the shore haven here, an offshore fog had swept about before a northerly breeze. The sou'wester that had prevailed for three days and blown itself out.

The race commision tug Susan B. Moran went out through the murk to the starting buoy, and soon after the racing yachts had hawsers passed to them by their tenders, which lugged them out under bare poles. They lay near the tug, foghorns sounding on their forward decks to warn any other craft that might be groping about.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Harold S. Vanderbilt, skipper of the victorious Enterprise, was in excellent spirits and smoking his inevitable pipe when he received newspaper men aboard his steam yacht Vara after the race.

"It was a good race and the Shamrock is a fast boat," Vanderbilt said. "Everything is shipshape and the men, of course, are quite happy. We will be ready to race Monday."

Among Vanderbilt's earliest congratulators after the race were Dunean Neill, Sir Thomas Lipton's representative, and Charles Nicholson, Sir Shamrock's designer. Neither seemed downcast by the challenger's defeat and Neill remarked:

SIGNALS: 1-9-3-0—THE FOOTBALL SEASON'S HERE

King Football made his 1930 debut yesterday when Lane Tech and Tilden elevens clashed at De Paul field. The weather was more suited for a day at the beach, but the players didn't mind, for they were imbued with the spirit of battle and were giving the great fall sport its sendoff in Chicago. Tilden won the game, 2 to 0, by a safety in the second quarter. Walters, a Lane tackle, running with the ball, was brought down with a thud a second after this picture was taken. [TRIBUNE Photos.]

The defense was stronger than the offense, and few long gains were made by Lane or Tilden backs yesterday. Ferguson, Tilden half back, has ripped through the line, but the Lane forwards quickly halted his progress. Spectators agreed that coaches of both schools apparently have devoted most of their instruction to stopping ball carriers, letting intricate offensive plays wait until the boys master fundamentals. (Story on page 4, Sports.)

Robins Coast Past Cubs by 4 to 3 Victory

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.

[Copyright: 1930: By The Chicago Tribune.]

Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 13.—Amid a barrage of those deadly saw-edged straw hats which jubilant spendthrifts hurl at their heroes in September, the Brooklyn Robins coasted past the unfortunate Cubs in close tandem with the Cardinals this afternoon. By a score of 4 to 3 the Robins won from Salvation Dan Howley's Cincinnati house of refuge, a team largely composed of elderly derelicts in the upper thirties.

Salvation Dan's down and outers had several momentary delusions of power, as shown by the fact that thirteen of them died yawning on the bases, but they succumbed strictly according to the probabilities after an exciting challenge in the ninth inning.

Four of the seven runs in the game were occasioned by three home runs, one of them authored by the highly intelligent Babe Herman, the outfielder, who reasoned matters out with shrewd logic and learned to catch fly balls so they would quit hitting him on the head. This was his thirty-seventh grand slam of the season, and the customers came up to salute him with a noise that was something positively fierce as he rounded the bags, distorting his sensitive features in a joyous grin around a cantaloupe of horse hair tobacco.

Phelps Weakens in Ninth.

Ray Phelps pitched for the Robins until two were out in the ninth inning when his composure seemed to leave him, and Uncle Wilbert Robinson sent Bill Clark in to strike out the last hitter with two on bases. Phelps gave ten hits and the Robins made a dozen themselves off Benny Frey and Larry Benton.

Only a couple of years ago John McGraw, who wouldn't wilfully deceive any one, was calling Benton the second Christy Mathewson, he being Larry's employer then and always eager for a star to draw the customers. Now Larry is with Cincinnati, along with Bob Meusel, the California sleep walker; Harry Heilmann, and Leo Durocher.

Not to digress too far, there was an odd freak of the weather in New York this afternoon and the Giants were compelled to call off their game with the Pirates owing to a terrific ten second drizzle along about noon in favor of a doubleheader on Sunday. In Brooklyn, however, the weather was much better. The athletes exposed themselves to rust and rheumatism during a faint mist of rain in the early innings, but then business was much better in Brooklyn and John Heydler, the president of the league, was sitting in the arena, so the game went right along.

Herman Starts Scoring.

Herman's home run began the scoring in the first inning. It was an arching shot that cleared the screen along the right field wall and fell to earth he knew not where, nor seemed to givadam. Blink Hendrick hit the next one over the same barrier in the next inning, scoring Del Bissonette, who had spun a single past the short stop.

The conduct of Brooklyn patrons in these two emotional crises was awesome to behold and hear. They seem a neighborly crowd, anyway, and they rip out their yells with the utter self-consciousness of the fan of 1906 beating and kicking another with the utmost good will.

In the third Johnny Frederick, playing center field for the Robins, went to the soil in a graceful sprawl reminiscent of Fainting Phillip Scott's corkscrew plunge, catching a long fly from Leo Durocher and lay there

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 13.—A left-handed Irishman named Frank O'Doul certainly picked a fine time to hobble into the Cubs-Phillies series. He got up from his cot in the Phillies' infirmary on this 13th day of what should be a happy month and smacked a homer which may go down as one of the saddest homers ever knocked. He performed the vicious deed with one on and two out and the score 5 to 5 in the eighth inning of this afternoon's game between the Cubs and Phillies. This made the Phillies win, 7 to 5, and dropped the Cubs from first to third place in the National league race.

There was to have been a second game, but rain washed out the contest in the third inning and caused the booking of a double-header for Monday. The Cubs might have got a modicum of revenge, though this isn't positive, for Phil Collins as pitching and the eight Cub batsmen who faced the fidgety right-hander weren't able to get the ball out of the infield.

Losing Leads Just an Old Custom.

The Cubs were at least consistent in the manner in which they got knocked out of first place, for they did it by blowing what should have been a comfortable lead, just as they have been doing all season against Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, two other second division clubs that have found it such an easy matter to spot the Cubs a hatful of runs, then trim them in the end.

The Cubs got off to a three run lead in the first inning. They were leading, 3 to 2, at the end of the second inning, and 4 to 2 at the end of the third inning. At the end of the fourth they were tied at 4 to 4, but they led again at the end of their half of the fifth, 5 to 4. Then they were overtaken again in the Phils' half of the fifth, 5 to 5.

When it became apparent that they were meeting trouble from an unexpected source, the Cubs again showed true to form. They tightened up, and in the last four innings only one Cub got on base, the same being English, who singled with two out in the sixth.

Phillies Wait for Break.

This prepared a nice spot for the Phillies' heroics. Having the offense all choked up to the point of suffocation, all the Phillies had to do was to wait for an opportunity to send over the winning run. But it hardly was pleasant to make the finish so dramatic.

Hurst led off the eighth with a fly to Wilson. Then Whitney, who had been a mean gent all afternoon, singled to left. There were two out when Davis flied to Wilson.

Now this man O'Doul has been out of the lineup with a bruised shin. The other day he revived enough to limp up to the plate and knock a homer which enabled the Phils to beat the Reds, after which he retired to his cot.

He was feeling better when Manager Shotton asked him to bat for Thevenow with two out and Whitney on base in the eighth this afternoon.

Lefty Whacks Curve Over Fence.

Pat Malone is a confident fellow. Two wide ones which he threw to Lefty didn't miss the plate very much. Another pitch hit Lefty's bat for a foul strike. Then Pat came right back in with a curve. Lefty moved up before the hook had a chance to make its full break. Bang! The ball soared high over the right field wall.

The Cubs' tenancy of first place, which had been continuous since Aug. 12, when they beat the Braves, and which reached a lead of 5½ games after the third game with the Cards at Wrigley field two weeks ago today, was at an end. The Cards were just starting their game in Boston, and Brooklyn had just launched their encounter with the Reds.

McCarthy's boys stayed in the rain, hoping that tidings from Boston and Brooklyn would bring them cheer. But the telegraph wires brought naught but more melancholy. The Cards are leading the league, the Robins are one percentage point behind in second place, and the Cubs are a half game back in third place.

Bruins Idle Today.

Tomorrow the Cubs will sit around in idleness again hoping for cheering news from Boston and Brooklyn, but

ARMOUR RALLIES TO BEAT SARAZEN FOR PROFESSIONAL GOLF TITLE, 1 UP

Flushing, N. Y., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—After proving a bitter disappointment to him all through the match, Tommy Armour's putter finally came to his aid on the 36th hole at the Fresh Meadow Country club this afternoon and gave him a victory over Gene Sarazen, 1 up, in the final match of the Professional Golfers' association championship.

Up to then there had been little to choose between Armour, professional at the Tam o' Shanter club near Detroit, and Sarazen, who is terminating his career as pro at Fresh Meadow. On the whole Armour had outplayed Sarazen up to the greens, but Gene had more than held his own on them.

They had battled for thirty-five holes and were just where they started. Armour had squared the match by a remarkable recovery from the rough on the short thirty-second. He had saved halves on the next three, two of them hard halves to get.

Sarazen Goes in Trap.

It was his honor and he drove to the left, just off the fairway. Sarazen's drive wound up in a trap and his recovery landed short of the trap in front of the green and popped in. A gasp went up when Armour followed suit for it looked like a great opportunity wasted. Afterward it developed that Tommy, seeing Gene's ball where it was and his own lying not too well, had tried to play safe and lost in the gamble.

Sarazen went down in the sand and chipped out ten feet past the hole. Tommy, after much deliberation, came out twelve feet to the right and beyond the hole. As he was about to putt, a camera fan, standing directly back of him, disturbed and he stopped. Finally he went back to the putt. When hit, the ball rolled slowly toward the hole and had just enough momentum to topple in.

Sarazen Unable to Hole Out.

Sarazen was unable to hole his and the wooden headed putter that Armour had thought of discarding earlier in the round had made him the successor of Leo Diegel as the P. G. A. champion—the sixth man to hold the title in the thirteen years that the event has been played.

Sarazen had the best of the first nine holes in the morning, when Armour's putting was so feeble, costing him two holes and half of another and leaving him one down at the turn. Then, on the second nine, Sarazen became a trifle wild and lost two more holes than he won to be one down, to Armour's 35.

Afternoon Nine Close.

It was nip and tuck again on the first nine in the afternoon where Sarazen, out in 36 to Armour's 37, had evened the match, having won the nineteenth and twenty-third holes and lost the twenty-first through driving out of bounds. When Sarazen holed a long putt on the twenty-eighth to become one up Armour's outlook was not bright, but he came back with a birdie on the next, holing a 4 yarder, and squared the match.

Gene, however, stymied him on the short hole, and when Tommy tried to jump his ball into the cup and failed the odds were all in Gene's favor. Armour had to fight for his half on the thirty-first after being off the green on his second and after appearing to lose his chance by failing to hit the next green, won the hole with a sterling recovery to within a yard of the pin out of the rough.

He had to make great recoveries on each of he next three holes in order to get halves. On each one the pressure was on him for Sarazen always had the advantage, but he came through with flying colors, and then won the match with that great putt on the last green.

Won Open with Same Putt.

It was a putt that was very much like the one he holed on the last green at Oakmont during the 1927 national open, the putt that tied Harry Cooper, whom he subsequently beat in the play-off.

Today's victory made him the outstanding professional golfer of the year, with two major victories—the P. G. A. title as well as the Canadian open crown.

JAMESTOWN WINS $121,760 STAKE FROM EQUIPOISE

New York, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—George D. Widener's Jamestown closed his racing career for the season by winning the $121,760 Futurity at Belmont Park today in a nose finish with Harry Payne Whitney's Equipoise which brought a cheering throng of 25,000 persons to their feet. Three lengths farther back finished A. C. Bostwick's Mate, which was shut off by Jamestown inside the furlong pole when Jamestown ducked toward the rail under pressure from Linus [Pony] McAtee, his rider.

McAtee had just called for all his horse had when Equipoise made one of the most sensational finishes seen in a two year old race this season. He bounded up on Jamestown, who had led from the start, lunged into the lead, and apparently had his rival beaten. But Jamestown responded to McAtee's lash of the whip and came from behind to nail Equipoise on the post. Laverne Fator, rider of Mate, claimed foul against Jamestown, but it was not allowed.

Winner Nets $99,600.

By the victory the son of St. James and Mile. Dade wiped out his defeat by Gifford A. Cochran's Epithet in the Hopeful and closed his two year old career clearly the greatest of the juveniles. Jamestown earned $99,600 net today, and raced under 130 pounds, level weight with Equipoise and Epithet. He is the greatest money winner among the two year olds and has suffered only one defeat, that in the Hopeful, when he finished a close second to Epithet, which had a thirteen pound pull in the weights. Epithet was sixth today.

Jamestown was the 11 to 5 favorite and confirmed his superiority over Equipoise, whom he previously had beaten in the Saratoga Special. He is the fourth horse in history to win this greatest and richest of two year old tests under 130 pounds.

The only other horse to do it in this century was St. James, his sire, who carried Mr. Widener's colors back in 1923. His Highness was the first 130

Cubs Must Win at Least 9 of 13 to Stay in Race

Yesterday's happenings in the National league race reduced by a considerable margin the percentage possibilities of the Cubs retaining their championship title. Out of first place by half a lap they are confronted with the task of winning at least nine of their remaining thirteen games. And even a pace such as that might not be sufficiently fast to carry them safely across the line when the curtain is pulled down two weeks from today.

At the rate the Cardinals and Robins are moving it is fairly safe to declare the Cubs will need ten of the thirteen decisions still on their schedule. If the Cubs win ten the Cardinals would need ten out of fourteen to tie. The Robins to tie would have to take nine of twelve still unplayed.

Should the Cubs win only eight more, the Cardinals nine more and the Robins eight, the final standing would be:

	W.	L.	Pct.
St. Louis	90	64	.587
Brooklyn	90	64	.587
Chicago	89	63	.578

The Cubs will be held idle today by Philadelphia's puritan laws, but the Cardinals and Robins will be in action against the same weak opposition they overwhelmed yesterday. The St. Louis entry is billed for two games at Boston; the Robins play a solo battle with the Reds. Should the Cards break even and the Robins win, the latter would jump into the lead as follows:

	W.	L.	Pct.
Brooklyn	83	60	.580
St. Louis	82	60	.577
Chicago	81	60	.575

A double victory for the Cardinals along with a win for the Robins would reserve first place for the former but only by a half game margin. The standing would change to:

	W.	L.	Pct.
St. Louis	83	59	.585
Brooklyn	83	60	.580
Chicago	81	60	.575

The Cardinals will still hang to first place if they divide their double header and the Reds can snap out of their slump long enough to whip the Robins. The standing then would read:

	W.	L.	Pct.
St. Louis	82	60	.577
Chicago	81	60	.575
Brooklyn	82	61	.573

Guy Bush Tells the World Cubs Will Win Flag

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 13. — [Special.]—Guy Bush, the only National league pitcher who has won a world series game in the last three years, still thinks the Cubs will win the pennant this year.

"This year's race is going to be settled in the last two days of the season," Guy said. "The Cubs finish the season with four games against the Cincinnati Reds, while the Cardinals have to battle it out with the much tougher Pittsburgh Pirates.

"The Robins still have to face the Cardinals and the Pirates, and also have one more with the Giants. I figure the Cardinals, Robins and Pirates will cut up each other pretty badly, while we've finished our schedule with all these teams and have only three with the Giants, of which we should win two.

"As far as today's game was concerned, I wish you wouldn't second guess Malone on the way he pitched to O'Doul in the eighth. Pat was throwing low to Lefty, just as any of us would have done. Lefty just happened to get hold of that curve before it broke. Such things happen to all good pitchers, especially when they face good batters, and O'Doul led both leagues last year.

"Some fans will say O'Doul should have been walked, but that would have put the winning run on second and a single would have been enough to put the run over. In my judgment there was only one thing to do and that was try to get O'Doul for the third out."

Bush will get a chance Monday to forward his prophecy of ultimate Cub triumph.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

The White Sox displayed no hesitancy about taking it on the chin yesterday. They permitted themselves to get tangled up in a four run handicap in the first inning. Later they made an attempt to offset the early mishaps, but they couldn't quite catch up, so dropped the second in a row to Washington's Senators, 6 to 4.

The luckless start made by the Comiskey employés involved Pat Caraway, this rising young southpaw, who on this occasion had his usual skill but no luck. Three fluke hits got him into the jam that brought on the four runs. Then he tightened up and southpawed smoothly for four rounds. In the sixth he weakened and departed, leaving behind him the two tallies by which the Senators copped.

The attack conducted by the Sox was of no consequence except in one inning. After being held to one hit by Irv Hadley, they roughed things up in the sixth and didn't subside until all their four runs had been accounted for. The only good derived from this was that it gave them the satisfaction of bringing about Hadley's retirement.

Nine Face Caraway in First.

Caraway found it necessary to pitch to nine members of the Washington team before being able to conclude the unhappy first inning. Myer was disposed of handily, but clouds began to form when Rice scratched a hit to Ryan. Manush bounced a fluky safety past Caraway. The Sox southpaw added to his woes by filling the bases on a pass to Cronin.

Judge hoisted a harmless looking fly back of third and Appling jogged back to snare it, but got only a hand full of air. The ball eluded him for a bargain two base hit which let Rice and Manush score and put Cronin on third. Harris then exploded the first real wallop off Caraway. It was a legitimate single between short and third, scoring Cronin and Judge. Caraway completed the inning without further trouble, except that he plunked Spencer in the rib with a pitched ball.

Caraway's foldup which amounted to two runs in the sixth was mainly a matter of control. He passed Myer after Hadley had fanned. Rice hit a two bagger into right, Myer stopping at third. Myer went home on Manush's fly that Reynolds pulled down out near the wall. Caraway than walked both Cronin and Judge, an offense for which he was yanked. Walsh was similarly afflicted. He passed Harris, forcing in Rice with the second tally of the inning.

Sox Score Their Four Runs.

The home sixth in which the Sox broke loose from the depressing influence of Hadley also was marked by generosity. One was gone when Cissell and Watwood walked, Reynolds popped a single to right, Cissell scoring and Watwood dashing to third. Jolley's infield out permitted Watwood to reach home. Barnes was passed and a single by Appling sent him to third. Fothergill, in the rôle of pinch swinger for Ryan, managed to loop a hit into short center, Barnes scoring and Appling hesitating at third. The rally died when Tate bounced into a force-out.

Rookie Jim Moore, who set down the Indians last Sunday, will attempt to duplicate his achievement against the Senators this afternoon. Crowder is the Washington nominee.

Sox Buy Pitcher Wehde from Dubuque Tigers

Dubuque, Ia., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Wilbur Wehde of Correctionville, Ia., for the last two years the leading right hand pitcher for the Dubuque Tigers, today was purchased by the Chicago White Sox, according to announcement by Fred Leiser, owner of the Dubuque club. The price was not disclosed. Although on a losing team, Wehde's average in 25 games pitched was less than three earned runs per game.

Robins Coast Past Cubs by Winning, 4-3

threshing like a fouled heavyweight, though he held the ball for the putout. Loving hands helped him up and he hobbled to the clubhouse gentling himself in the region of his hip pocket, not at all unlike a ruffled citizen who has just been kicked out of a saloon and wants a policeman at once to enforce his constitutional rights.

Like Swift. Kick in Pants.

Mr. Frederick was reported to be in great pain and incapacitated for at least three days, and the club trainer, when asked to diagnose the injury in terms which the public would understand, stated: "If the public ever has had a good swift kick in the pants, the public knows the exact nature of Frederick's injury."

Sukeforth tripled and scored Cincinnati's first run on a sacrifice by Durocher in the fifth.

The Robins got their third run in the eighth by laborious works, a walk for Bissonette, a single by Hnedrick, and a single by Mickey Finn, which brought Bissonette home from second. Just before these incidents, Salvation Dan's boys filled the bases with two men out and were very hot and somewhat bothered when a lad named Evar Swanson struck out with a count of 2 and 2. This Swanson boy made himself a bit of nuisance hoisting fouls hither and yon for at least ten minutes and the customers told him so in Anglo-Saxon monosyllables.

Same Result Likely Today.

Crawford scored the second run for Salvation Dan's side with a scant home run in the ninth with one man out. Cuccinnello forced Stripp and came home when Heilmann and Meusel singled. The whole Brooklyn club then conferred with Phelps and he went away, allowing Clark to strike out Johnny Gooch to end the game.

The same boys play on the same ground tomorrow, and there seems no reason to expect any different net result.

BIG TEN COACHES DISCUSS RULES, STUDY PROBLEMS

Football coaches of the Western conference met yesterday morning at the Stevens hotel to discuss interpretation of the rules.

While only two major changes have been made the rules have been recodified since last season, the first revision since 1906. The coaches state that the new code has many minor changes on which agreement of interpretation is necessary.

The Big Ten leaders united in requesting that the umpire and referee coöperate this fall in timing shift plays. The new rule provides that a shift must halt for "at least a second" and the referee is empowered to time the shift with a split second watch or to count rapidly to six.

The revised rule on the screen pass also was discussed. Maj. John L. Griffith, Big Ten commissioner, presented fifty problem plays designed to bring out controversial points of the code.

Conference officials also met yesterday in a similar session.

The Big Ten coaches present yesterday were: Robert Zuppke, Illinois; A. A. Stagg, Chicago; Richard Hanley, Northwestern; Noble Kizer, Purdue; Fritz Crisler, Minnesota; Burt Ingwersen, Iowa; Pat Page, Indiana; Harry Kipke, Michigan; Sam Willaman, Ohio State, and Glenn Thistlethwaite, Wisconsin.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 13.—(AP)—The league leading Athletics spurted ahead early in the first game of the two game series with the Cleveland Indians today and won, 9 to 2.

Lefty Grove replaced Earnshaw in the fifth inning, and eliminated possibility of the long looked for pitching duel tomorrow between Wesley Ferrel, Cleveland ace, and Grove.

Jimmy Foxx's home run in the fourth was a feature of the game. The Indians used three pitchers, Hudlin, Harder and Jablonowski, who went in in the eighth. Score:

DOEG DEFEATS SHIELDS TO WIN TENNIS CROWN

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—A new tennis champion, John Doeg, youngest to capture the title in 15 years and the first American to succeed William Tilden as the holder, was crowned at Forest Hills today before the biggest crowd that has gathered in the stadium of the West Side Tennis club since 1927.

In the final round of the forty-ninth annual tournament, with 13,000 spectators cheering them on, the 21 year old California giant, defeated Francis Shields of New York at 10-8, 1-6, 6-4, 16-14, to carry the title back to the Pacific coast for the first time since William Johnston came through in 1919.

In reality, the title will remain in the east, for Doeg stated before going to the court that he will make his home in New York and henceforth will confine himself to one or two tournaments a year, giving up Davis cup play for a business career.

It was a fitting climax to the Californian's last year of extensive competition that he should have come to the championship. After his victory over Tilden in the semi-finals and Frank Hunter in the round before, defeat today would have been a cruel stroke of fate. The same magnificent tennis that Doeg put forth against Tilden was offered against Shields, though his service was not consistently as effective.

But if defeat would have been cruel for Doeg, it was no less heart breaking for Shields. The 19 year old New York schoolboy, who had put out Wilmer Allison, Gregory Mangin, and Sidney B. Wood Jr. in advancing to the final, made a gallant fight for the title. For two and a half hours the battle waged, with the play so close and the outcome hanging on so often a thread time and again that the gallery was almost as exhausted at the end from the strain and excitement as were the contestants themselves.

The fourth set was the longest one on record in a final round of the championship, requiring 30 games and one hour and 22 minutes for a decision.

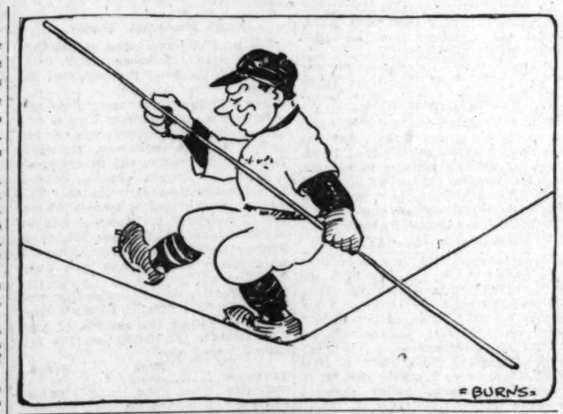
Gains by Shields' Fall.

In making one of his amazing recoveries Shields fell on his stomach and the wind was knocked out of him for several minutes before he was able to resume play, and when he started to get out of the chair that he had placed under him, Doeg put his foot on his shoulder and shoved him down again, with the order to stay there until he had fully recovered.

It was almost dark when the match ended. Owing to the almost intermittable duration of the final of the veterans' championship, which preceded the men's final and lasted nearly three hours, Doeg and Shields did not appear on the court until an hour and three-quarters after they were sched-

Close Race Leaves Players in Air Over Vaudeville, Literary Plans

BY EDWARD BURNS.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]



Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 13.—The feverish state of the National league race has been a curse to world series literary and vaudeville plans—a curse on an industry that was none too healthy even last year, when the Athletics and Cubs were cinch winners long before the close of the season.

It may be that the talented members of the Athletics have closed contracts for writing, singing and indorsing, but so far as we have been able to find out, Manager Joe McCarthy, Hack Wilson, and Rogers Hornsby are the only Cubs who have made arrangements to enlighten and entertain the world through pen, wit and voice, come October.

These three gents, they tell us, are ready to break into production, just as soon as the Cubs win the pennant, if they do win the pennant.

Not knowing whether the Cubs are going to win the pennant, the trio is in a serious fix. The fellows haven't been feeling much like thinking up smart ideas, and even if they did it would be pretty tough to put in a lot of thought all for nothing.

Rich Harvest Changes to Orders of Cancellation.

Last year at this time almost everybody on the Cub team was signed up for something or other and a rich harvest was anticipated. It was learned later, however, that advance sales of literature was pretty much of a flop, and cancellations were cast about merrily at the very last minute.

We remember that Hack didn't get his cancellation until he was aboard the train for Cincinnati, where the Cubs were going to wind up the season. Hack had signed with a syndicate in good faith and imagined his contract meant something. He was astounded to learn it was merely a scrap of paper and became very irate, swearing at the time he'd never give another word to literature unless it were a burning exposé of folks who take advantage of trusting ball players.

Five Cs Make Hack Change His Mind.

We now learn, however, that Hack has accepted $500 for the use of his name, with the assurance that he personally won't have to have a thought or dip his pen in ink a single time. Last year Hack hadn't heard of the ghost writer hoax and expected to do all his writing himself. This year he was smarter and grabbed the five C's with the assurance that it would not be necessary for him to do anything whatsoever, not even read the stuff appearing under his name.

Of course, the ghost writing thing is pretty much a matter of common knowledge and has been for five or six years, but last year was the first in which editors really opined that their customers had reached the point of sophistication that they could find no additional allure in seeing the name of some athlete at the top of a piece. We know the boys who are going to do McCarthy's, Wilson's and Hornsby's writing and are frank to say that we'd be quicker about reading any thing under their own names than we would any that Joe, Hack, or Rog personally would write for publication, supposing for argument that them some time should be called upon to write something themselves. These ghosts happen to know their stuff, and if their employers can find any body who still thinks that baseball or other athletes can write expertly, McCarthy, Wilson, and Hornsby will be rated even more cultured than at present.

Macks Ruin Trio's Debut on Stage.

On the other hand, any player who gets in the world series who can walk a slack wire, juggle Indian clubs or walk a big gold ball, he can make a lot of money for a couple weeks after the series. Vaudeville, as such, isn't what it used to be, but the big movies have ample place in their spectacles for well known young men of great dexterity.

Last year, you remember, Capt. Charley Grimm, Kiki Cuyler, and Cliff Heathcote had arranged to present a banjo, uke, singing, and funny anecdote number at a loop theater. They posed for a talkie-movie announcement which was shown at the theater, but after the Athletics made 10 runs in one inning one Saturday afternoon, the customers gave the announcement movie-talkie the bronx cheer every time it was shown.

Word of the reception reached Charley, Ki, and Cliff and they sought to bolster the act by offering to do a slide for life and also perform the illusion of sawing a lady in two. But it was too late. They never made their stage appearance.

Which brings us back to Hack: If he only had a little more time he could learn to lie on a table, Japanese fashion, and with his toes toss about an ornamental barrel. He's built just right for that kind of work and we bet the act never would get canceled like Charley Grimm & Co.'s act did.

EDITH II. TAKES BENNETT TROPHY; INTRUDER SECOND

Edith II., owned and sailed by Bert Williamson, yesterday won the Bennett cup, emblematic of the Jackson Park Yacht club championship, in the final race for the trophy, sailed off the club harbor. The O'Rourke brothers' Q boat Intruder, which had held the Bennett cup for the last seven years was second, and Bryce Hess' yawl Beaver third.

The light, variable southwest wind was suited to the Edith II., for it was in this brand of weather that she won the Michigan City race on Aug. 31. It was run to the first mark, a close reach to the second, and a dead beat home.

The thirty foot Williamson boat was the first across the line, followed by Intruder and Beaver in that order. They held that order on the first time around the triangular course. Going around the second time Intruder and Edith II were quite close together. Intruder took the lead for a time but couldn't hold it in the prevailing light airs and Edith II. took a quarter of a mile advantage which she retained to the end.

The winning crew was composed of Skipper Williamson, Art Weil, Pansy Alford, and Bill Nelson, while Intruder was manned by Skipper Bill Whalen, Dave Callahan, Deacon Currier, and Kenny McClelland.

36 PONIES OF U. S. POLO TEAM BRING $73,200 AT SALE

East Williston, L. I., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—The ponies which were gathered together this summer to carry the American candidates through the test matches and the international games went at auction this morning, together with those C. B. Wrightsman loaned to Eric Pedley for play and some that Elmer Boeseke Jr. rode in the test matches.

Katrina, the gray mare which carried Thomas Hitchock Jr. in the famous sixth period of the deciding match, brought the highest price of the sale, when she went to the stable of A. Charles Schwartz, the Sands Point back, for $10,000.

Other Prices Low.

This was the only pony of the lot to bring a price bordering on the high ones of sales during recent years, the prices of the others varying from $200 to $6,000. The latter price was paid by John Hay Whitney for Laura, the brown mare which was also successfully used by the American captain in the matches.

Whitney added several to his string, as did Hitchock and two members of the Old Aiken side, James P. Mills and J. C. Rathborne. Thirty-six ponies were sold for a total of $73,200. The summary of the sale:

British Average $4,000.

Yesterday the British polo expedition of 1930 came to the end of its trail with 48 ponies going to new owners. Averaging slightly under $4,000 each, the ponies, which included 40 of the Hurlingham club string, six of Lewis Lacey's and two of Gerald Balding's, brought a total of $183,400.

The white faced bay mare, ridden for two periods in each game by Capt. C. T. I. Roark, and which answers to the name of White Slave, brought the highest price of the lot, $13,000, and she went to join two sensational ponies of other years in the stable of Stephen Sanford, leader of the Hurricanes. White Slave became the third highest priced pony that the game has seen, third only to the $22,000 Jupiter and the $13,000 Judy, also owned by Sanford.

Next in line in the matter of price, at $10,000, was Lady Luck, a small chestnut mare which Lewis Lacey owned and which played for him this season. He went to John Hay Whitney.

Boys! Only Two More Days to Enter Kicking, Passing Test

Entries will be received today and tomorrow for THE TRIBUNE'S drop kicking and forward passing contests. Then the lists will be compiled for the seven sectional tests which will start at 9 o'clock next Saturday morning.

The preliminary meets are scheduled for Bessemer park, Washington park, Douglas park, Kelvyn park, Mills' stadium, DePaul university field and Loyola university field. The winners, or those who tie for first place, will clash in the championships at Mills' stadium Sept. 27.

Mail Blank Immediately.

Clip the entry blank which appears in today's paper and mail it immediately. Then you are assured of an opportunity to try for the right to attend a college football game as a guest of THE TRIBUNE. While the Navy-Notre Dame game at South Bend Oct. 11 and the Northwestern-Illinois contest at Champaign Oct. have been designated as the games the winners may see, if these dates conflict with high school contests in which the champions play they may choose any other game in the Chicago territory.

When the goal posts were placed ten yards back of the goal line, it not only made the scoring of a field goal more difficult, but it also handicapped the kicker seeking to add the extra point after touchdown. The ball is put in play two yards from the goal line in the try for point. A pass or running play which crosses the line counts the extra point as well as a drop kick or placement. Consequently many coaches have preferred to use passes or running plays in the try for the point.

Few Consistent Goal Kickers.

The drop kick is more easily executed, but the coaches seldom have men on their squads who are expert enough to kick goal consistently. And in the rush of preparation for their games the coaches find they do not have sufficient time to develop kickers.

THE TRIBUNE devised these drop kicking contests to foster interest in this phase of the game. While coolness under fire is necessary, continued drill will produce an easy rhythm which will score more times than a plunge or pass will succeed.

The drop kicking tests will be from a distance of 20 yards for boys 14 years of age and under. The senior group, composed of boys 15 to 19 inclusive, will kick 30 yards.

Passing Tests at Same Time.

The passing tests will be held at the same time as the drop kicking. The rules permit you to try both. Each contestant will have five passes at a circle 3 feet in diameter. The younger boys will pass 15 yards while the older lads will pass from a distance of 20 yards.

Several hundred have sent in their entry blanks. Clip today's blank and mail it at once to the Football Contest Editor, CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

BEARS PREPARE FOR FIRST GAME WITH BROOKLYN

In training for the opening of the national professional football league season with Brooklyn here next Sunday the Chicago Bears have made rapid progress under Coach Ralph Jones in the last week.

Veterans and new men alike on the squad who have gone through three years of college football took readily to the system used by Jones, the same which he employed as coach at Lake Forest academy. The wealth of material has given the new coach much latitude and one of the first things he did was start Walter at half back instead of at full.

WINSTON GUEST'S TEMPLETON FOUR BEATS EASTCOTT

Westbury, L. I., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Play started this afternoon in the open polo championship, with Winston Guest's Templeton team riding through to the second round at the Meadowbrook club.

With Guest on his team were two of the British internationalists, Lewis Lacey and Lieut. Humphrey Guinness, and Winston's brother, Raymond. They had little difficulty in stopping Eastcott, 18 to 4, leading almost from the start and adding steadily to their total through the course of the game.

Templeton was to have played Greentree, on which Thomas Hitchcock Jr., the American captain, is to be at No. 3, but George H. [Pete] Bostwick suffered an injury and as a result was given the bye which had been Eastcott's in the original draw.

Eastcott Four Outclassed.

On Eastcott were C. V. Whitney, Earle W. Hopping, Eric Tyrell-Martin and William H. Post. They were the lowest handicapped team in the tournament and they never had much of a chance against the hard hitting lineup which is riding for Templeton.

Winston Guest, relieved of his responsibilities as back, went to No. 2 and enjoyed himself there. With some one else to watch his goal, he rode all over the field, hitting out at full strength and playing a fine, aggressive game.

Lacey continued at times the sensational play which brought him bursts of applause during the international and behind him Guinness again was hitting hard. Raymond rode well out at No. 1 and the team was almost constantly on the attack.

Post Good at Back.

Post played well at back, but he was never given much time for his shots and his direction suffered on some. Eric Tyrell-Martin, a six goal English visitor playing his first polo here, had several spots of good play.

The tournament continues Monday, when Old Aiken plays Sands Point. The lineup:

TEMPLETON (18).	EASTCOTT (4).
R. Guest 1	C. V. Whitney
F. C. Guest 2	E. Tyrell-Martin
L. Lacey 3	E. W. Hopping
H. Guinness ..... Back	W. Post III.

Score by periods:

Templeton	4	1	4	1	2	3	2	1—18
Eastcott	0	2	0	2	0	0	0	0— 4

Goals—Templeton: Raymond Guest 7, Winston Guest 6, Guinness 4, Lacey. Eastcott: Hopping 2, Tyrell-Martin, Post.

Referee—Capt. Wesley J. White. Time of game—Eight periods of 7½ minutes each.

PANSY WALKER IS VICTOR IN $5,000 HANDICAP RACE

Beats Uluniu by Four Lengths.

BY FRENCH LANE.

Pansy Walker ran the greatest race of her brilliant carreer at Lincoln Fields yesterday and when she rounded out the mile of the Steger handicap in 1:35 4-5 and won by four lengths she demonstrated that she is the best 3 year old filly of the year.

Her old rivals in the Oaks of last spring—Snowflake and Alcibiades—were not running against her, but the fleetest handicap performers of the west were pounding the turf behind her trying to catch up. They didn't catch her and it looked like they couldn't have caught her if they had run to the Rocky mountains.

Daughter of Sir Galahad III.

Pansy Walker, like Gallant Fox, the monarch of the 3 year old colts, is an offspring of Sir Galahad III., so the famous French sire now can tell his associates down in Kentucky how his 3 year old sons and daughters have dominated the American turf this year. Those famous Kentucky sires may not like it, but all the French horse need do is point at the record books and make them like it.

Fnishing second to Pansy Walker in the rather one-sided contest was Uluniu, a far westerner, which would have paid off at 38 to 1 if he had been able to catch Pansy Walker.

Pigeon Hole, coming from the rear with his famous rush, was a nose back of Uluniu to be third. He was running fastest of all as they reached the finish but Pansy Walker was so far in front of him his late rush did not give her any concern. Beaming Over was fourth and My Dandy was fifth, with the others in the field of ten badly strung out behind them.

My Dandy Takes Lead.

In the early part of it My Dandy was in front, showing all his old time early speed. But even this fleet fellow couldn't get more than a half a length away from Pansy Walker and at the end of the first five furlongs Pansy Walker had conquered My Dandy and she romped on out into a lead of three lengths.

The race was over then and there, for Pansy pulled away all through the stretch fight and was going as easy as any of them when the official verdict was returned. In the betting Pansy Walker paid $10.70 to win, $5.92 to place and $3.82 to show. Uluniu was at $29.82 to place and $12.22 to show. Pigeon Hole, at slightly less than 3 to 1 to win, paid $3.30 to show.

It was a stormy session of racing at Lincoln Fields and a crowd of about 18,000 was in a turmoil most of the afternoon.

Two Long Shots Win.

Two long shots came home in the first two races when Jack Berry and Boiling got the decisions. Jack was at 11 to 1 and Boiling at 34 to 1. Then, in the Valley Brook Country Club purse, a dash at six furlongs which found Tantivy the winner, there came some foul riding.

Lady Fingers, ridden by M. Rose, had been far out in front in the early stages. Tantivy had been running last. Tantivy races for Harry Payne Whitney, and he staged one of the master stretch runs of the year when he overcame a 10 length lead in the stretch and went on to win easily. But as he passed Lady Fingers, Jockey Rose tried to grab Tantivy's bridle. The stewards watched it, as it happened just in front of them. They suspended Jockey Rose for sixty days.

In the fourth race, after Gotoit had won by a neck over Don Fernando, the favorite, the placing judges made a mistake and gave the race to Don Fernando, placing Gotoit second and Fort Dearborn third. It put the crowd in a bad humor and the judges were booed longer and louder than the judges have been booed on any race track in Chicago this season.

Gotoit Won, It Seems.

The official chart makers in their hurried description of the finish gave the race to Gotoit. So did nearly everybody else in the crowd but the placing judges. Even some of the Don Fernando backers expressed a guilty feeling when they cashed their tickets.

The finish didn't even look close. Gotoit won the race by a margin of feet, not by inches.

PRO-AMATEUR TOURNEY LAST DISTRICT MEET

The Chicago District Golf association will hold its last tournament of the season tomorrow—the pro-amateur at Sunset Ridge. The field at present includes 21 teams but further entries will be accepted at the tee. Competition will be at 27 holes, best ball to determine the winner.

The professional who places first will receive $100 and his amateur partner will be given an appropriate gift.

Jamestown Wins Futurity Stake by Nose

pound winner in 1891 and Domino duplicated the feat in 1893.

Jamestown ran the six and three quarter furlongs in 1:20 3-5, after a twelve minute delay at the post, due mainly to the bad behavior of Anchors Aweigh and Equipoise. Equipoise ran like the wind, despite cutting up, but Anchors Aweigh was always far back. The order of finish after the placed horses was Polydoris, Baba Kenny, Epithet, Novelist, Sun Meadow, Anchors Aweigh, Sir Ashley, Ladder, Risque, Dunstan, Ormsby, and Barometer.

The break far up at the end of the Widener chute was a good one, although invisible to many fans because of the distance and cloudy weather. Jamestown at once leaped into the lead as he had been expected to do. He is fast as a cat the post, and many favored his chances because of his splendid post manners.

Equipoise was as long priced as 7 to 2, mainly because he is a slow starter, but he got off smartly today. So did Epithet, which was the 9 to 2 third choice. Baba Kenny, one of the two fillies in the race, was on in stride with Jamestown, and Mate was close behind. Baba Kenny quickly dropped out of the fight and Jamestown forged on under light urging, with Mate and Equipoise less than two lengths away.

Equipoise Moves Up.

Jamestown was running as the point of a spearhead, with Mate on the inside of him and Equipoise on the outside of him. The three were not urged until the quarter pole, when McAtee moved out with Jamestown, took a comfortable lead, and held his horse in hand. Suddenly, past the furlong pole, Equipoise rushed up on the outside, disappeared for a moment as he was concealed back of Jamestown, and then the blue blinker hood of Whitney showed in front. Jamestown seemed beaten. It had happened in the twinkling of an eye and was a great piece of work on the part of Raymond Workman, who rode Equipoise.

Then McAtee made his fateful cut with the whip which won the race but very nearly tossed off the great purse of almost $100,000. His horse shied from the sting of the lash, bore over on Mate, and then lengthened out in a game, gallant charge that stamps him one of the greatest juveniles ever seen at Belmont Park.

TILDEN ELEVEN DEFEATS LANE IN OPENER, 2-0

Tilden Tech's football team defeated Lane Tech, 2 to 0, in their annual practice game at De Paul field yesterday. The two teams have opened their schedules against each other the last three years. Tilden won the first game, but Lane evened the series last year.

The lone score of the game was made late in the second quarter on a safety by Gustavson, Lane half back. A wild pass from center sailed over his head and when he recovered the ball found half the Tilden line on top of him.

HORACE MANN, 12; LINDBLOM, 0

Horace Mann of Gary handed Lindblom of Chicago, City league runner up, a 12 to 0 defeat on the victors' gridiron yesterday. Miller and Story went across the line for Horace Mann, the former after a march from Lindblom's 42 yard line and the latter on a 14 yard run after a poor punt by the Chicagoans.

Women Approach Records of Men in Field of Sport

Woman's place, according to Victorian precepts, was in the home, but her twentieth century sister divides her time between the home and the athletic field. It may be woman's sports activities reflect her political emancipation. Others may say man's inventions, lightening the age old household duties, have made possible woman's athletic activities.

Whatever the reasons, woman has turned to practically every sport man had considered his domain. While the records established by women in most sports have not approached those of man, this does not detract from their excellence. Physically woman cannot vie with man in the more strenuous sports. Moreover, man has developed his physical fitness through the centuries.

No Place in Combat Games.

Combat games, such as football and boxing, as yet have no place in a sports program for women athletic enthusiasts. On the other hand, women have entered other games which require stamina. Chief among these, of course, are swimming, track and field, tennis and basketball. In sports based on skill and grace there can be no doubt that woman eventually will equal or surpass masculine deeds if she has not done so already.

Comparison between the records of men and women is unfair. Moreover, it is difficult to match their marks save in bowling, ice skating, swimming and track. A comparison is impossible in such field events as the shot put and discus throws, for women put an eight pound shot while men's marks are made with an iron ball weighing twice as much.

A résumé of women's athletic achievements show that there is an ever increasing number of excellent performers in each sport. In tennis Helen Wills Moody reigns supreme and has since her greatest rival, Suzanne Lenglen, became a professional. Helen Jacobs, America's second ranking star, and the leading players of England, with Mrs. Moody, form a group of stars capable of defeating all except the ranking masculine performers.

It's Same in Golf.

The same situation exists in golf. The leading women golfers have acquired a skill that would overwhelm the average man. Yet they only approach the golf displayed by the best men on occasion. Glenna Collett, United States champion, Diana Fishwick of England, Helen Hicks of New York, Mrs. Harry Pressler, Mrs. M. D. Horn, Mrs. Tyson, newly crowned western champion; Maureen Orcutt and Mrs. Lee Mida, Mrs. Melvin Jones and Virginia Van Wie of Chicago are a few of the ever increasing list of women stars. These women consistently score in the 70's.

Consider these records and then visualize what women may accomplish in the future in golf.

Mrs. Melvin Jones and Glenna Collett have scored 73s. Mrs. Jones established her record in the first round of match play for the Chicago championship in 1928 over the No. 1 course at Olympia Fields. Men's par is 72 and women's par, 82. Mrs. Jones defeated Mrs. Lee Mida, one up, although Mrs. Mida's 75 ordinarily would have won on any other occasion. Virginia Van Wie defeated Mrs. Jones in the finals for the title.

Glenna Collett set her mark of 73 at Pinehurst, N. C.

Rival Men at Archery.

Rifle shooting and archery are competitions in which women eventually may challenge man's supremacy. Varying distances make comparisons difficult. Mrs. Audrey Grubbs of California, national archery champion, had scores of 631 and 965 respectively in the double national and American rounds of the tournament held recently in Chicago. Russell Hoogerhydge of Coldwater, Mich., national men's champion, scored 2,517 points, shooting from a distance of 100 yards. Mrs. Grubbs shot from a distance of 60 yards.

With the exception of exhibition games women have never played baseball under the major league rules. Soft ball, more adaptable to the abilities of women, has become exceedingly popular and thousands of girls, from schools and industries, are engaging in the game. Basketball is another sport sponsored in recent years by the school and industrial athletic associations.

As yet women have not acquired the skill of men performers on the basketball court, but such teams as the Taylor Trunks of Chicago and the Edmonton Grads of Alberta, Canada, have developed formidable quintets playing the same style of game as professional teams.

Sonja Henie Star Skater.

The skill of Sonja Henie of Norway, would's champion figure skater, challenges the ability of the best men ice skaters.

The argument that women do not develop the endurance of men is not entirely compatible with such records as long distance swimming. Gertrude Ederle, for instance, the first woman to swim the English channel, crossed in 14 hours and 31 minutes. The men's record is held by Hans Vierkoetter of Germany at 12 hours and 42 minutes although Georges Michel of France is credited with faster time the accuracy of the test has been questioned.

Bowling, ice skating, swimming, and track and field athletics permit a comparison between the records of men and women. Following are the records for each sport:

DUBS AND STARS CLOSE W. G. GOLF MEET TOMORROW

1,400 Matches Played in Tribune Tourney.

This will be the last big day for contestants in THE TRIBUNE golf tournament. All players must get their sixth and final round cards to THE TRIBUNE golf editor by tomorrow night or they will lose by default.

Approximately 1,400 matches have been played in this meet, making it the biggest ever undertaken in the history of the sport. Competition has been open to dubs and experts alike, and all have had an equal chance to win, as nobody was paired against an opponent who outclassed him.

Nearly All Matches Close.

The equality with which the players have been matched is illustrated by the fact that nearly all the matches have been closely fought, the winner usually scoring his victory by a margin of only one or two strokes.

Matches have been played on practically every public course in the Chicago district and many of the contestants have mailed in cards from far-away points in Canada, the west, and the Atlantic seaboard, where they have been spending their vacations.

Awards for Winners.

After the results have been completed those who have won the greatest number of matches will receive gold bronze buttons to wear as a symbol of their skill and those who have faithfully competed in the greatest number of matches will get similar awards.

Players who have not yet turned in their cards for the final round are urged to go out and play their part of the match today, as their opponents will be waiting eagerly to learn the result. Be sure to write your opponent's name as well as your own upon the card.

MERCUR, RANKING NET STAR, LOSES AMATEUR STATUS

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 13.—[Special]—Frederic Mercur of Bethlehem, Pa., sixth ranking tennis player of the country, has been declared to have forfeited his amateur status and is ineligible to compete in tournaments or matches held under the auspices of the United States Lawn Tennis association.

The executive committee of the United States Lawn Tennis association, in session late Friday evening, sustained charges brought against Mercur by the amateur club committee of having written insurance in return for playing in a tournament.

Doc Krone's Civic Pride Is Touched; Wants Wrestling

Doc John Krone is ready to shed more tears for those fellows who engage in that sport which he says "is the noblest and most entertaining of them all," the wrestlers.

The doctor, who is about all there is left in Chicago of this once thriving and grunting sport business, is preparing to go before the Illinois Athletic commission and ask for a clean bill of health for those he calls "My big boys."

The biggest of the grunters of the mat were asked to take their beefsteak appetites and get out of Chicago by the Illinois commission last Jan. 1. There was a row on between the different wrestling factions. The commissioners did not suspect the genuineness of the appetites of these big fellows nor did they question the beauty of their grunts, but they became fearful that some of the matches were not on the up and up. So the heavyweights were asked to depart.

This was a crushing blow to Doctor Krone who for so many years had been inviting his public in to see "his big boys" grunt, gouge and crush each other until one was helpless on the mat.

"It hurts me like it hurt nobody else," the doctor explained last night. "It was a blow at my civic pride. Think of it, Chicago, once the mat center of the universe, now dark to wrestling, and cities like Dallas, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, and Boston drawing unheard of crowds. Why should Chicago suffer while Dallas, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, and Boston reap such benefits?" The doctor didn't explain the meaning of "benefits."

"Maybe I should say enjoy such fine entertainment," he said. "For that's what wrestling is."

The wrestling chief expects to go before the Illinois commission within the next few days. "And I will make a plea for the big boys which I believe will not be denied. I'll cry a little if necessary."

He says he is ready to open up with what he termed "some very big ones" as soon as the big boys get the O. K. of the commission.

ENTERPRISE WINS FIRST AMERICA'S CUP YACHT RACE

Defender Beats Lipton's Shamrock 2 Minutes.

the harbor waiting for the fog to lift. For hours the foghorns on Rose and Goat islands groaned unpleasantly.

Finally a radio was sent by the race committee that it was clearing with a good racing breeze outside. Instantly there was a clank of upcoming anchor chains, a puffing of smoke from funnels and the long treck out to sea began.

It was ticklish going as the big vessels squeezed as best they could out of the bottle neck of the bay. Little fellows got in the way, asserting their right to a place on the ocean, but not always using good judgement under the bows of the large craft.

Lipton's Yacht in Collision.

There were some accidents. The steam yacht Erin, owned by Sir Thomas and carrying the owner of the Shamrock, was in collision with the motor yacht Gay Jane of Boston. The boats came together broadside and little damage was done. The Gay Jane scraped the length of the Erin, crumpling the port gangway, and damaged a tender slung near the stern. The Gay Jane had part of her starboard rail torn away.

The Gay Jane, caught in the wash from larger vessels, was in danger of swamping for several moments and was almost caught under the Erin's stern.

When the whole fleet assembled outside it seemed as if a great floating city had sprung up. In every direction the eye carried were boats, boats, boats.

In the center lay the two racing yachts, coverings over their furled mainsails to keep them dry until the last minute. The sea was smooth, with only a ripple on it. Just as all seemed brightening two streaks of fog that had banked in the northeast and northwest blew apart and spread another dismal blanket over everything.

Sails were hoisted on the racers, and they began slipping about. The warning signal was given. Both racers stood for the line together, with mainsails eased off on the port hand, and spinnaker booms slung out to starboard.

What advantage there was, was in Skipper Vanderbilt's favor. He had the Enterprise to windward, slightly ahead, and going faster. Shamrock's spinnaker was broken out first, but Enterprise drew into a clear lead.

They're Off Into Mist.

The sun was out, but there was fog ahead. The sails became dark triangles indistinct on the horizon. Astern of the gray they were in was sun sparkling blue water.

Shamrock had the larger spinnaker. It was too large to fill in the light breeze, and it buckled and sagged at intervals. Slowly, foot by foot, Enterprise pulled ahead.

The breeze hauled a little toward the northeast. Enterprise took in her spinnaker and jibed, setting it on the other hand. As she did so she bore in a little on the course. The two were a third of a mile apart, Enterprise ahead to the westward.

Just then the breeze moved a little more clockwise. Enterprise took in her spinnaker. The shift in the breeze had turned the course into a reach. They both kept on their ballooners, and did not attempt to fill in with a small head sail under them.

Nearing the mark the breeze shifted to northeast. Staysail and jib then were set on Enterprise. Shamrock took in her ballooner and set lower head sails.

A jib topsail quickly was run up on Enterprise. Shamrock also broke out a topsail.

Reach Half Way Mark.

Enterprise jibed around the halfway buoy, flattened in sheets, and started the close hauled work back home by crossing the bow of Shamrock before the latter reached the buoy. Shamrock jibed around two minutes and four seconds after Enterprise.

They laid the course back to the finish. Enterprise's mainsail fluttered on the leech. Shamrock, directly astern of her, began footing fast. She had on a long hoist jib topsail, while Enterprise carried a shorter one.

It now had almost cleared. It was all blue overhead, and there was only a faint haze around the horizon. The two racers stood out much clearer than they had.

Enterprise settled soon to the work of keeping her lead. There was little weight to the air, and the yachts seemed sluggish, and to move lazily along in it. Toward shore it was hazy and cloudy. The sails of the racers were drab in the lowering visibility.

Enterprise moved out nearing the end. She crossed the finish line amid a deafening blast of whistles. A great cheer greeted the Shamrock.

The Official Record.

Then the official record was announced thus:

	15 mile mark.	Finish.	Elapsed time.
Enterprise	2:02:55	3:58:18	4:05:18
Shamrock V	2:05:02	4:01:40	4:06:40

Just after the race ended a lively breeze came up. Motor-sailing craft that had chugged along all the afternoon hoisted canvas and began to scud along. The cup racers were taken in tow back here.

As the race was sailed, no particular display of tactical skill or master seamanship seemed called for under sailing conditions that were distinctly ordinary. In the leeward run, Enterprise simply footed faster, with all sails spread, and a shift of the wind made the beat home a much simpler matter than was to be expected. It was merely a long reach, close hauled.

The significant feature, so far as the experts were concerned, was that Shamrock was beaten under conditions of light air and moderate sea, in which she was presumed to excel. Either the experts had been "crossed up" or they had underestimated Enterprise, for Vanderbilt steered a winning race through all the fitfulness of breeze and fog.

Beforehand they said Shamrock was superior before the wind, but it was not manifest in competition, and the best the challenger can hope for now is that a change in racing conditions may change her luck.

The second race, over a triangular course of 30 miles, is scheduled for Monday and the series will be continued daily, barring accidents or other causes of postponement, until one yacht wins four contests.

Lipton Smiles at Shamrock's Loss of First Cup Race

Aboard Yacht Erin, Newport, R. I., Sept. 13.—[U. P.]—Sir Thomas Lipton's tall frame is slightly bowed beneath the weight of his 81 years, but never by defeat. If there was disappointment in his heart when Enterprise showed his latest Shamrock the way across the finish line, it was not to be seen in his face.

"Well," he remarked to his friends on the bridge, "that's over. Now we'll go below."

Shamrock's owner showed little effects from his recent illness and was as carefree as a boy.

The fog that drifted along with the fleet as it left Brenton cove was Sir Thomas' only annoyance, and as the weather cleared so did Sir Thomas' face.

Still smiling after the race he received the newspaper men.

"If I were to say I wasn't disappointed," he said, "I'd belong in a mental home. And yet, if I thought I didn't have a chance, I'd bundle all the boats up and send them home again."

As the Erin turned toward the harbor when the race was over, she was saluted by every passing vessel and masses of enthusiastic persons crowded the rails to applaud Sir Thomas.

The Erin dropped her anchor in the cove just as Enterprise came to her mooring under tow. The white clad sailors manned the rails, took off their hats and gave three loud cheers for Shamrock, to which Erin's crew responded. The incident touched Lipton deeply and once more he beamed.

"That's sportsmanship, good sportsmanship," he repeated. "That's very fine indeed."

BRITISH SPEED QUEEN WATCHES YANK YACHT DEFEAT SIR LIPTON'S

Aboard Yacht Erin, Sept. 13.—[U. P.]—In a snappy yachting costume and a fetching beret, Betty Carstairs, England's speed queen, watched the cup races today as a guest of Sir Thomas Lipton and wished she might be out there with her famous motorboat.

Betty, who prefers to be called Barbara, thinks 80 or 90 miles an hour on the water is good going, but she thought Enterprise and Shamrock did fairly well, considering the fact they had no motors.

"Just because I was beaten at Detroit," she said, "that's no reason why I should stop racing. I'm going back to England and try for more speed before I come over again."

MOTORS — TRAFFIC — HIGHWAYS

STATE SENATORS WILL BE POLLED ON ROAD PLAN

Tribune Seeks Stand on Metropolitan Area.

To give motorists of the metropolitan area an opportunity to vote Nov. 4 on important road questions that will come before the next session of the general assembly, THE TRIBUNE is conducting a poll of candidates for the state senate from this area. The poll also includes holdover senators from this district.

Yesterday a letter containing three questions was mailed to be the senators and candidates. The questions are:

1. Will you vote for a bill requiring the state highway department to give road improvements to the thirty-seven senatorial districts of the metropolitan area in proportion to the revenue collected by the state from the motorists of this area?

2. Will you vote for grade separations and widening on arterial routes in preference to building new roads not on the bond issue system?

3. Will you vote for a specific construction program such as the plan suggested by the Chicago Motor club?

Pays 67 Per Cent of Road Bill.

The significance of question No. 1 lies in the fact that funds will be available for the completion of the state bond issue system, for the widening of 870 miles of the important highways radiating from Chicago for a distance of 100 or 150 miles, and for the building of 63 grade separations before 1933, providing the state allocates improvements to this district in proportion to the motor registration fees and gasoline tax collected here. The area pays 67 per cent of the state's total road bill but for the last ten years has received in return only 37 per cent of the state's highway improvements.

The significance of question No. 2 lies in the fact that many interests will be at work in the general assembly trying to divert road funds from the projects that would return the most benefit to the motoring public, the improvement of the arterial routes. From some communities there will be political pressure petitioning the state to pave a purely local road. Efforts will be made in some quarters to have the state build roads designed to enhance subdivisions rather than to relieve traffic congestion to alleviate travel hazards. However, the completion of the bond issue system, regardless of the comparative importance of the roads, is removed from the question of recognizing the state's obligation to the electorate that passed the bonds.

Specific Program Needed.

The significance of question No. 3 lies in the fact that without a specific program, or at least the skeleton of a program, it will be difficult for the legislature to appropriate from the gasoline tax and the motor registration fees so as to assure major benefits to the traffic system of the metropolitan area before the World's Fair.

The Motor club announced its program on May 18 of this year. There has been lots of opportunity for the public to study it.

The program carries major benefits to 37 senatorial districts of northern Illinois, including the 19 districts of Cook county. If the legislators from these districts will vote together, they can control a majority in the general assembly. A majority in the senate is 26 votes.

The Motor Club Plan.

The Chicago Motor club plan consists of an extension outward from Chicago of the widening work on Gov. Emmerson's construction program for 1930 and 1931. The state is now widening the radials for 30 or 35 miles from the city. The widening proposed by the club for 1932 and 1933 construction is as follows:

Route 1—Dixie highway, from Crete to Joliet, 100.3 miles.

Route 23—Kankakee to Urbana, 75.4 miles.

Route 4—Joliet road, from Willow Springs road to Springfield, 175.7 miles.

Routes 7 and 20—From Joliet to Peoria, 130 miles.

Route 18—Ogden avenue, from Aurora to Mendota, 50.7 miles.

Route 6—Roosevelt road, from Geneva to Sterling, 80.8 miles.

Route 5—Lake street, from Elgin to Freeport, 50.5 miles.

Route 19—Northwest highway, and Route 23, from Barrington to Wisconsin line, 39.2 miles.

Route 60—Rand road, and Routes 20 and 61 from Euclid avenue, Arlington Heights, to Wisconsin line, 38.6 miles.

Route 21—Milwaukee avenue, from Half Day to Wisconsin, 24.2 miles.

Route 68—From its junction at Lake Forest with the projected Skokie highway to the Wisconsin line, 19 miles.

Other Widenings Planned.

In addition the program calls for widening for a few miles at centers of population where local traffic mingles with through traffic, such as at Danville, Champaign, Urbana, Peoria, Rock Island, Sterling, Freeport, and Galena.

The candidates in Cook county districts who will receive the questionnaire are as follows:

Holdover Senators.

Elections are being held this fall in the odd numbered districts only. Senators elected from the even numbered districts have two more years to serve on their present terms. The motorists of the metropolitan area need the support of these holdovers in the fight to widen the arterial highways and separate grades. For this reason THE TRIBUNE is including them in the poll. Those who will receive letters are:

District.	Name.	Address
8.—	Ray Paddock [R]	Wauconda
10.—	Charles W. Baker [R]	Monroe Center
12.—	Joseph L. Meyers [R]	Schiota Mills
14.—	Harold C. Kessinger [R]	Aurora
16.—	Simon E. Lantz [R]	Congerville
18.—	Victor P. Michel [R]	Peoria
20.—	Richard R. Meents [R]	Ashkum
22.—	Martin B. Bailey [R]	Danville

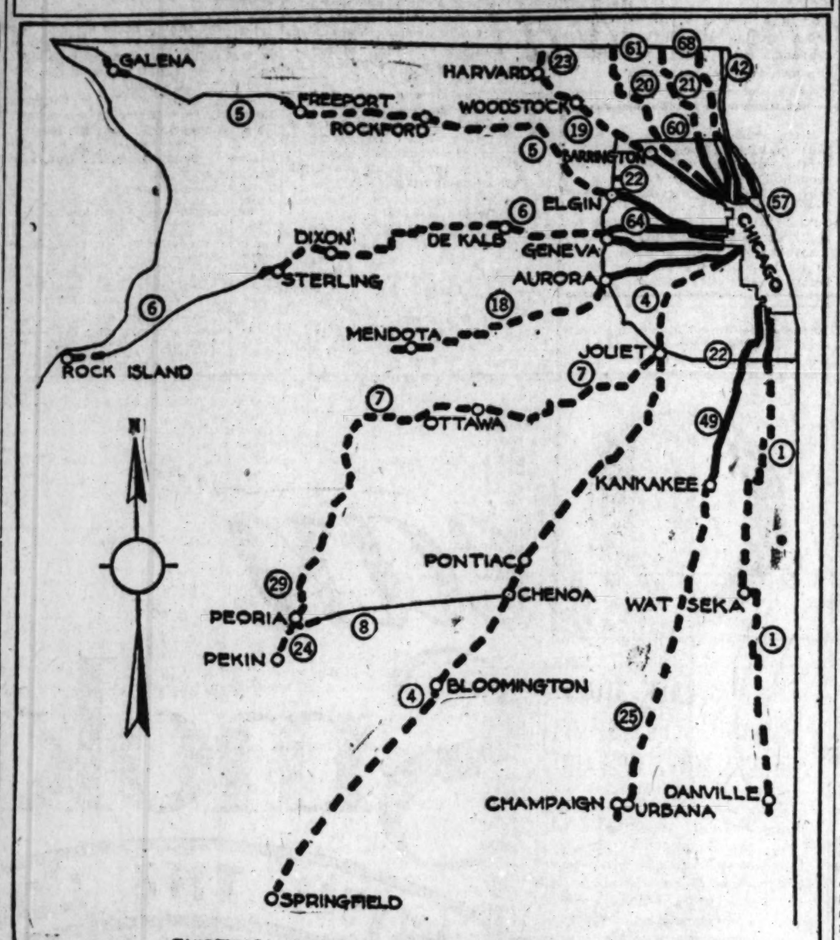
26.—	Florence F. Bohrer [R]	Bloomington
28.—	Charles E. Lee [R]	Decatur
30.—	Exler C. Mills [R]	Virginia

The answers to the questionnaires will be published before the Nov. 4 election.

POLL ON ROAD PROGRAM



This map, reprinted from The Tribune of May 18, shows the 870 miles of widening which, with 63 grade separations, are on a biennium construction program to be submitted to the next session of the legislature. The Tribune is polling the senators and senatorial candidates of the area most directly benefited by the road plan. Their attitudes toward such a construction program will be published for the information of the motorists who will visit the polls on Nov. 4.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Two new lines of Packards were announced this week. They include twenty-three body types exclusive of custom jobs. There are no radical changes, although several refinements have been effected. In the new cars, the custom and de luxe lines have been consolidated into a new de luxe line with eleven different body types, and offered at approximately $1,000 less than the price of the former de luxe car. A substantial decrease also has been made on the standard eight 5 passenger sedan as compared with that of last year.

An entirely new line of motor trucks, designed and engineered to meet present day demands for power, speed and flexibility in traffic, is announced by Dodge Brothers.

Following the introduction of its sixth de luxe passenger car, Ford announced today that its dealers throughout the country will unite in staging a Ford de luxe car week, beginning tomorrow.

Citing the large sales increase in the summer months by the Franklin retail organization in Syracuse, where the air cooled car is manufactured, H. H. Franklin points to business upturn as being the logical result of greater effort on the part of sales forces, whatever may be the product involved.

Further evidence of a definite improvement in business is offered by W. A. Blees, vice president in charge of sales for Oakland, who announced yesterday a progressive increase in both new and used car sales.

Honoring the founder of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber company, pioneer in the rubber industry, the board of education of Akron, O., next month will dedicate the city's most modern public school to the memory of the late Dr. Benjamin Franklin Goodrich. The dedication comes in the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Goodrich company. Dr. Goodrich was born in Ripley, N. Y., Nov. 4, 1841, and died Aug. 3, 1888.

SPEED OF CARS INCREASING.

The power of the average American automobile has increased about 54 per cent in the last five years, according to a recent survey taken of 1925 and 1930 models by the American Research Foundation.

AVIATION

AIR RACE REPORT TELLS STORY OF FLYING SAFETY

BY ROBERT WOOD.

Maj. R. W. Schroeder, contest director of the 1930 national air races and manager of the Curtiss-Reynolds flying field, where the races were staged, sat silently contemplating two reports tossed on his desk by his secretary for scrutiny and signature.

One was an accident report covering the ten days of activity during the national air meet. It showed that three pilots had died in as many serious crashes. The other was a report of passenger carrying activities at Curtiss field for the period from May 1 to Sept. 1. It showed that 36,351 paying passengers had been flown from the field and that of this number none had been even slightly injured.

Shorty Schroeder has been flying for 20 years, and his flying has been done in all kinds of airplanes under all sorts of conditions. Age and experience have given him a calm outlook upon flying and, although he is not yet out of his forties, he is known in the flying fraternity as the "grand old man of aviation."

Story in a Nutshell.

"There," said Shorty, pointing to his reports, "is a very important story in a nutshell. It ought to be told to the man on the street, to the 400,000 people who watched the stunting, speeding planes during the races, and especially to those young flyers with little experience and too much daring. The moral is that straight, normal flying is as safe as riding in an automobile and as different from the stunt flying of the air races as black is from white.

"There is a place for the dangerous flying of the type that caused these accidents. Somebody has to put the airplanes through their paces to see what they can do and where they fail, or the art of flying would never develop. But the public should keep in mind the clear line of distinction between show flying and the ordinary safe flying of commercial planes."

Cause of the Accidents.

Schroeder's report showed that the accident to the navy plane in which Lieut. Jack De Shazo was killed was due to a dangerous maneuver at an altitude so low that the pilot was unable to correct it. The plane was flying on its back when the propeller wash of a plane above and in front of it suddenly tipped the wings of De Shazo's plane.

The second accident of the meet which caused the death of George Fernic, airplane designer, was attributed in the report to structural failure. The Fernic plane was an experimental craft supporting a small wing in front of the mail airfoil. The soundness of this forward "stabiliser" had never been established, according to Schroeder, who stated that at certain angles in the air the plane was unstable. The plane crashed because it was unable to correct the fault the designer set out to conquer in his unique design.

Page's Ship Out of Control.

Many causes have been suggested as the reason for the crash which resulted in the death of Capt. Arthur H. Page. After sifting all theories, Maj. Schroeder and naval and marine officers who examined the wreckage are confident that Page's racing plane got out of control when the support of his pilot's seat buckled under the weight of the pilot's body augmented by centrifugal force as the plane banked on the turns of the race course. This, they believe, let the seat down upon the control tubes and fouled them.

The accident in which Maj. John A. Macready was injured was caused when an aileron of his experimental plane ripped away as he was turning a pylon at great speed.

"It should be clearly impressed upon the minds of young pilots that speed flying and stunting is only for experienced hands," said Maj. Schroeder. ("The average motorist can't perform dangerous tricks with his automobile and expect to get away with it, nor can the average pilot. The intricate maneuvers of the army, navy and marine corps planes are the result of long and careful training of the service pilots and are necessary for combat purposes. Stunting of commercial planes is necessary to test their strength and maneuverability."

1929 AIR PASSENGERS DOUBLE TOTAL FOR 1926, 1927, AND 1928

Air passenger figures for 1929 in the United States, just made public by the department of commerce, reveal that twice as many persons were carried last year as were transported the three previous twelve months.

"And," declared Harry H. Blee, director of aeronautic development, "twice as many passengers were carried from July to December, 1929, as were carried from January to June. The July-December total was in itself larger than any previous year."

It was shown that 173,405 persons rode the air lanes last year. In percentage this was a 248.81 increase. Department of commerce reports show that air passenger figures since 1926 were as follows: 1926, 5,782; 1927, 8,679, and 1928, 49,713.

"The figures should constitute concrete evidence that this type of transportation has firmly intrenched itself," remarked Mr. Blee. "That 173,405 persons utilized the scheduled air lines in 1929 does not mean the saturation point has been reached. There are countless thousands who have air transportation at their door, but have yet to take their first ride. A greater increase will result when air lines push into territory now waiting for fast transportation service."

FEW AUTOS IN CHINA BECAUSE OF FEW ROADS

Took Car Ten Days to Make 178 Miles.

BY JOHN POWELL.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SHANGHAI.—[Special Correspondence.]—An American automobile manufacturer, two years ago, sent instructions to his Shanghai agent to conduct a demonstration tour between Shanghai and the nearby city of Hangchow. The distance between these two cities is only 178 miles, but it took the Shanghai dealer exactly ten days to make the trip and instead of a demonstration trip, it turned out to be an "endurance" tour. The car was new when it started; it resembled a second hand car when it reached Hangchow.

The explanation for this was that there is no such thing as a modern road leading out of Shanghai into the hinterland of China.

Shanghai newspaper correspondents still smile over telegraphic instructions which the local representative of a New York newspaper received: "Proceed by automobile to Hankow; cover bandit situation." Hankow is about 600 miles from Shanghai as the crow flies, but to have made the trip in a motor car probably would have required two or three years because it would have been necessary to construct a road first.

Still No Motor Road.

This incident occurred four or five years ago when it was only possible to reach Hankow by a river steamer that required practically a week. Today it is possible to travel from Shanghai to Hankow by air in five or six hours, but still there is no motor road connecting the two cities.

There probably are not more than 20,000 motor cars in the entire Shanghai district, which has a population probably in excess of 3,000,000, and 50,000 cars in the entire country with 400,000,000 population. The reason for this is twofold—the low economic status of the masses of the Chinese population, and the lack of roads connecting with other parts of China.

The reason for the lack of roads for touring purposes in the Shanghai district, the wealthiest and most advanced section of China, is largely political, the Chinese government fearing that a system of roads radiating from Shanghai to the interior of China, might facilitate the so-called "foreign aggression" for which they profess to be greatly afraid. The Chinese authorities claim that when they finally come into undisputed possession of the foreign concessions at Shanghai, that they will construct the necessary roads, but that remains to be seen.

But while Shanghai's 20,000 motor car owners are more or less "bottled up" it is possible for one to make limited automobile tours in certain parts of the country, especially in the north in the Peking-Tientsin district. Peking and Tientsin are connected by an 80 mile road and the owner of an automobile in Peking can drive a considerable distance, perhaps could spend one day in steady driving without retracing their route. This also might be possible in certain parts of Shantung province, the chief roads in this district having been constructed by the American Red Cross as a means of providing labor for famine refugees in 1919-1920.

Over the Canals.

In northern Kiangsu province, about 400 miles north of Shanghai, it also is possible to travel over dirt roads through an interesting district where the Chinese manufacture salt for most of their 400,000,000 people. The country is criss-crossed by a system of canals used to bring the seawater back to the evaporation beds. The Chinese have not bridged these canals, but have constructed curious double tracks across the streams with slabs of granite, each about two feet in width.

At Hangchow, capital of Chekiang province, southward from Shanghai, it is possible to travel over roads for about 250 miles and view the beauties of a region replete with temples and ruins of ancient Chinese grandeur, this city having once served as a capital of China and being popularly known as China's "heaven on earth."

In Szechuen province on China's far western border, probably 1,500 miles west of Shanghai, an extensive system of roads is being constructed connecting the provincial capital, Chengtu, with the head of steamship navigation on the Yangtsze.

Roads Around Canton.

Kwangtung province in south China, of which Canton is the metropolis, has also constructed several roads which permit of limited automobile travel. The centuries old wall that previously surrounded the city was town down to make space for a boulevard entirely around the city.

There are less than 30,000 miles of roads suitable for automobile traffic in the entire republic, which has an area considerably larger than that of the United States. American manufacturers of automobiles and trucks look at the map of China and sigh for roads, being perfectly correct in the feeling that if the country had roads, plus stabilized politics for a few years, that it might easily become a major market for America's production. But motor roads as well as about everything else of a constructive nature in China awaits the stabilization of politics.

Curiously to relate, however, the civil wars which have ravaged the country for the past dozen years have largely been responsible for the mileage of roads which the country possesses, the reason being that the rival generals need roads in order to transport their troops.

Many of the roads have been built by utilising the soldiers as laborers. This happened in Shanghai about ten years ago when a general in control of the area suddenly needed a road about ten miles long connecting the city proper with the Yangtsze river. He put his soldiers to work and in about three months completed the Shanghai-Woosung road, one of the best examples of road construction in the country.

Studebaker Head Optomistic; Sees Business Revival Ahead

BY HAL FOUST.

Albert Russel Erskine paused in his work on an afternoon last week to tell an interviewer about the automobile industry, its prosperity prior to last October's stock crash, its lean months this spring and summer and its health and vigor as it opens the fight this fall to shake America from business lethargy. He is president of the Studebaker corporation.

ALBERT R. ERSKINE

Mr. Erskine's views on economic subjects are frequently sought because he is a leader in an industry the condition of which effects the prosperity of America generally, employing close to 4,000,000 and consuming more raw material than any other class of factories. But his published statements are rare, and valuable, for, as a Studebaker press agent remarked lugubriously, "The boss is a poor press agent; he probably won't give you a story."

Found Hard at Work.

The boss was found in his office at South Bend, Ind., shortly before 5 p. m. In other departments, salesmen, file clerks, bookkeepers and others were clearing their desks to close the day. But the boss had his elbows and eyes in the midst of business papers. After the introduction, he leaned back in his chair, arms hanging at his sides, feet spread and face aglow, like a prize fighter in the concentrated relaxation between rounds, a fighter in the automobile industry, a battler in his prime at 59.

"This seems to be your busy day," the visitor commented.

"These are busy times," he replied. "These are opportune times for the workers to get ahead of the moaners."

"Is the automobile industry going to do anything this fall to reduce the number of moaners in the country?"

"We have started and we're getting results," he declared emphatically. "We've taken the initiative in an aggressive campaign to start money circulating as it did before last October.

Business Picking Up.

"The Studebaker corporation has made a radical mechanical improvement in its product and we've plunged into a vigorous advertising and sales drive. Other companies are likewise throwing coal in their boilers, and business generally is picking up.

"This activity wasn't so essential during the couple of years leading up to last fall. In the boom, companies coasted along and with little effort produced dividends for the stockholders. The engineers made nice refinements on the automobile but there was nothing startling. The advertising and sales departments enjoyed the comforts of a receptive market and contented boards of directors.

"The automobile industry was overbuilt. Mediocre efforts reaped profits. Money was squandered in poorly conceived and illy placed advertising. Buyers came to the salesmen.

"Then the slump. Frightened, timid merchants canceled advertising schedules. Salesmen were fired. Industry crawled into its shell. It was a lean spring and summer. The automobile business lost its surplus fat.

Auto Industry Healthier.

"And now, this fall, we're back doing business again. Automobile manufacturing is a healthier industry as a result of its fasting. We're spending advertising money with more intelligence. We're offering the public something decidedly new in motoring. We're getting sales. There's business for those who go after it."

The Studebaker corporation's main bid for business is its "free wheeling" innovation, a device that permits the car to coast, under full control, when the foot is lifted from the accelerator, the engine idling while the car swings along the highway under the smooth, noiseless power of momentum. Gears are shifted from second to third and back to second again at any speed without touching the clutch pedal.

"It's the most radical improvement in many years," said Mr. Erskine, who joined Studebaker in 1911. "You'll see the device on several other cars at the automobile show in January. Studebaker controls the patents so I'm in a position to know what's happening in factories other than our own.

New Driving Experience.

"Free wheeling has aroused public interest, stimulated attention on the new models. It was an aggressive venture to put the product on the market. Such aggressive initiative is what was needed to stimulate buying, to stimulate business generally, and we're being rewarded for a successful enterprise."

There is no doubt but what "free wheeling" offers a new driving experience. This correspondent drove to South Bend in one of the 1931 models borrowed from the Studebaker show rooms on South Michigan avenue.

Like the conventional car, the gear was shifted into first and into second. The shift into third is made without using the clutch, and there isn't any trick in doing it. In heavy traffic, it was found convenient to leave the gear in second. The car coasted along at ten or twenty miles an hour with the engine idling; a step on the accelerator shot it forward with the power of second gear, and then the engine idled until another dash was needed.

Momentum Is Harnessed.

In the hills of northern Indiana, the car "free wheeled" down grade with the easy movement of a rope swing. Coasting down hill in a conventional car is barred by statute in many states because of the danger of the machine getting out of control. The "free wheeler" is shifted into conventional gear with a touch of a button on the shift lever, a depression of the accelerator to synchronize the gears, and a flip of the lever.

"Free wheeling," it is claimed, saves twelve per cent in gas consumption.

"We have harnessed nature's greatest force, momentum," said Mr. Erskine with the enthusiasm of a youthful advertising copy writer. "It is almost as important as man's invention of the wheel before the dawn of history."

VOICE OF THE TRAFFIC

DEFENDS BLUE ISLAND.

Blue Island, Ill., Sept. 6.—In running through your interesting column, I noticed the item by "E. F." captioned "Blue Island Stop Sign." In the first place, I will say that I am now and have been in close touch with the traffic problem in our city for several years, and want to say also that no "motorist trap" exists here now or ever has. Also want to inform "E. F." that the stop light referred to is more than a mile inside the city limits of Blue Island and is not any more obscured than any of the four corner traffic stop lights in the city of Chicago.

The accusation that he makes that this is just another "shakedown village" is the farthest thing from the truth, as the motorist is given more than a break by our police, unless the violator becomes abusive and sarcastic with his language.

The big trouble is this—that the Chicago motorist who is inclined to be "smart" will come into the suburbs and see just how far he can go before he gets picked up by the "hick police" for violating traffic rules that he doesn't dare violate in Chicago. Then when his bluff is called and the local police stop him to warn him, said "wise" big city motorist becomes abusive and expects the officer to apologize for stopping him.

Hoping that these few lines will clear the name of our fair city and also set "E. F.'s" mind at ease, I am,

HAROLD C. VOLP.

MAYWOOD ARREST.

Elgin, Ill., Sept. 8.—On July 24 James Moustis of Geneva, Ill., purchased a truck from our concern of a heavier weight class than the one he had been using and his license plates called for.

On the day of the purchase he made application with the state for the increased weight and paid the required amount. However, due to ignorance on our part, Mr. Moustis was not instructed to send in the old plates, and he placed them on the new truck.

Shortly after, Mr. Moustis was picked up in Maywood for overloading his truck and booked several days later for trial. During the intervening time Mr. Moustis reported his trouble with us, and we gave him a notarized receipt showing that application had been made for the increased weight class at the time the purchase was made. However, this did not seem to satisfy the Maywood authorities, and our customer was fined $16 and some odd cents, although he did not plead guilty.

Mr. Moustis called us up on the telephone just after the trial had taken place, and after some time I was privileged to speak to the person I was told was the desk sergeant. I explained to him that this man had complied with the law in every way that he knew, and I did not believe that he should have been fined. Mr. Desk Sergeant informed me that they had this gentleman's $16, and that was all they wanted.

The writer believes that this is nothing short of highway robbery. It is our sincere hope that THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE will be able to put a stop to operations of this kind. R. S. LORD.

NOT SPEEDING AT ALL.

Chicago, Sept. 8.—Headlines read: "Jury to Conduct North River Quiz." Last Fourth of July I was driving with a friend at 30 miles per hour. There wasn't a house within a mile of us, when up drives an officer in a small sedan and pushes us over to the side of the road and informed me I was "pinched" for speeding. There were no speeding signs any place to be seen. Upon my explaining to him that I was going 30 miles an hour on an open highway with not a house in sight, he told me if I had been going 21 miles per hour I would have been arrested just the same.

On the night I was to appear it would have cost me $20 to leave my business, as I work by appointments only. I told a friend of mine, who volunteered to try and help. After trying through several different sources, she informed me I should put up my $25 bond for not appearing and then forget about it, as several people had put up $25 bonds and were refunded $1 when they appeared. Evidently this has been going on for some time. If such officers are released from duty, it is almost too late, as the victims never will be repaid.

WEST END AVENUE.

Chicago, Sept. 11.—A terrific accident was witnessed recently on West End avenue near Laramie street. Two cars collided, with the result that one lay on its side and the other was completely turned over. Fortunately, the occupants were but slightly injured.

Accidents such as this are unnecessary. In spite of the fact that West End avenue is a more heavily traveled street than any of the side streets that cut into it, still it has no more right of way than those side streets.

There are plenty "Stop," "Thru Street" signs all over Chicago. Why can't the city prevent such catastrophes and give West End the right of way between Crawford and Laramie, by placing these signs on the streets cutting into West End? Otherwise we may expect more of these dreadful happenings. Does this prove the council's being inconsistent, or does it entail too much expense?

H. A. R.

TAX DODGERS.

Chicago, Sept. 10.—Don't you think it would be a good thing to charge those motorists with a heavy fine who use the city streets, have money to pay for gasoline and oil but not a cent to pay for their license? I have seen two cars this week still bearing the old, rusty license plates from last year. It seems as if there are no policemen to look after these drivers.

F. W.

BOULEVARD PARKING.

Chicago, Sept. 12.—Why spend money for signs on Warren avenue, Washington boulevard and Austin boulevard, reading as follows, "No parking."

The other night I counted sixty-five cars parked on Washington boulevard from the loop to Austin boulevard. On Austin boulevard one block south of Chicago avenue there were twelve cars parked in one block.

It is my suggestion that either the law should be enforced or the signs taken down, as we have enough laws that are not enforced without putting up some more.

PLAN SUGGESTED TO RELIEVE JAMS ON NORTH AVENUE

Would Have One Way Streets in Elmhurst.

The use of two streets for one-way traffic has been proposed by Du Page County Highway Superintendent Gates to relieve congestion on North avenue, Illinois route 64, through the village of Elmhurst. The scheme has been looked upon favorably by village trustees and by engineers of the state highway department, but has not been officially adopted.

The western boundary of the suburb, approximately eighteen miles from the loop, is the end of fast travel for Chicago bound motorists after speeding over the forty foot pavement of North avenue from the Fox river valley. At times of heavy traffic, especially on Sundays and holidays, the full load from this forty foot speedway is thrown on to a second class thirty foot village pavement. Congestion becomes so acute that cars have to creep forward a few feet at a time for as much as a mile, until the eastern limits of the village are passed and a fair gate can be resumed for awhile.

Lake-North Intersection.

The primary cause of this congestion is the intersection of Lake street and North avenue where traffic from both highways is carried over on pavement for about a quarter of a mile. Streams of automobiles are forced to converge and then to diverge, either maneuver by itself a serious obstacle to progress of heavy traffic, but together as serious as would be the fording of a wide river.

The state highway department, after more than a year of delays, will probably start construction of a grade separation at this intersection next spring. Condemnation proceedings for the right of way for the structure are pending in court.

The grade separation, with the widening of Lake street now under way, will give traffic on this great Illinois 5, reasonable facilities for passage through the northeast corner of Elmhurst. But North avenue traffic will receive only partial relief through the elimination of the heavy cross traffic unless the impediment of the narrow village street is also removed.

Plan One Way Street.

Rather than widen the village street of North avenue, Mr. Gates has drafted a plan to use this thirty foot bituminous pavement for east bound traffic only and to use Grantley street, one block north, for west bound traffic only. Grantley is likewise a thirty foot bituminous pavement. The state highway department would be asked to build adequate connections on gentle curves between Grantley and North on the western and on the eastern village limits.

"It will in all likelihood be at least a year before the grade separation is constructed, and there is no use operating one way traffic until this is built because Lake street is now carrying all the North avenue traffic it can handle," said the Du Page county highway superintendent. "It will be a simple job to lay the connections and, although I can't speak for the state highway department, I'm confident we'll have the two one way streets."

Fear Congestion.

The Chicago Motor club pointed out that even with a thirty foot pavement reserved for one way traffic there will be congestion of North avenue motorists on the Elmhurst streets during rush hours.

"West of the village," said Gates Barton, the club's engineer, "two lanes of cars travel at forty-five or fifty-five miles an hour. When they are brought down to thirty or thirty-five miles an hour in the village they will need at least three lanes for automobiles to keep moving at this reasonable rate for a through street.

"With parking permitted on both sides of the street, there isn't room for two lanes to move at a reasonable speed. Parking will have to be restricted to one side of the street adequately to accommodate two lanes of traffic and two lanes is the minimum that will move the traffic.

Street Repairs Needed.

"Also the pavements will need repairs. Both streets have a penetration asphalt surface that is long past its best. And the street corners are of the old design that has the bumps that will break springs for automobiles driving close to the curb. This old pavement will probably have to be entirely replaced within a couple of years, although in satisfactory condition for the purpose for which it was intended, for local use on a residential street, the pavement won't do to serve through traffic."

A counter proposal being studied is a plan to widen and pave North avenue through Elmhurst, about a mile and a half, to a width of fifty-six feet, sufficient for four lanes of traffic between parked cars on both sides. The street is built up mainly with suburban cottages whose owners would not sell part of their front yards, having lawns, trees, and shrubs, without a court fight.

WHEAT PRICES AGAIN REACH SEASONAL LOW

Weakness in Corn Felt in Market.

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

There seems to be nothing to check the persistent declining tendency in the wheat market. While there was a small advance early yesterday on short covering and scattered commission house buying, a break came toward the last that carried prices off 2¼@2⅝c from the high and all deliveries sold at a new low for the season, with December down to 85⅝c. Final sales were at the bottom with net losses of ⅝@1c, September being 85⅝c, December 85⅝@85¾c, and May 92⅝@92½c.

Weakness in corn had some effect on the wheat market toward the last, although buying of wheat against sales of corn helped to prevent a severe decline. Many operators evened up for over the week-end at the last. Winnipeg was 1⅛@1¼c lower, with October closing at 79¼c, selling below the inside figure established in 1914. Buenos Aires was off ⅝c for the day. Export sales in all positions were finally reported at 200,000 to 300,000 bu, largely Manitobas.

Grains Lower for Week.

Liquidation was on in all grains during the week, with wheat 4⅞@5½; corn, 1½@6⅝c; oats, 3¼@3¾c; and rye, 1⅝@3c lower, as compared with the finish of the previous week. Lard lost 30@42½c, and bellies 25c for the week.

Dumping of wheat in European markets by Russia during the last few weeks is regarded as being the main factor for the slow demand for North American grain and has helped along the decline to the lowest levels of the season. It was reported in Liverpool that Russia sold 7,000,000 bu wheat to Italy the last week, and active chartering from south Russian ports was in evidence, space being taken recently for 2,400,000 bu for September shipment. The dumping is causing alarm abroad and also in the United States and Canada, as well as in the southern hemisphere.

Weather conditions in Argentina have come to the fore as an influence in the world's wheat market and part of the steadiness in Liverpool yesterday was on cables telling of rains being needed for the new crop. Unless rains are received this month or in October the situation would become critical, according to Broomhall. Australian conditions, however, are favorable. Liverpool finished unchanged to ¼d higher with October increasing its premium over the December, as there is no cash wheat available for delivery at a parity with the future.

Owing to the poor quality of the European wheat crop this year it is expected that modifications of the French and German regulations regarding grinding of foreign grain will be made shortly, while Sweden has suspended the law temporarily.

Liquidation in Corn.

Corn market lacked aggressive support and with liquidation under way and continued pressure from locals prices dropped 2@2¼c to a new low on the present movement, with the finish at net losses of 1⅝@2c; September being 92¼c; December, 87⅞@88¼c, and May, 88⅝@89⅝c. Buying against bids and by shorts checked the decline, although early there was some buying that was regarded as reinstating recently sold out lines.

Spreading operations continue between wheat and corn and at one time only September corn was at a premium over the same delivery of the former grain. Shipping demand was fair, with sales of 63,000 bu, with country offerings light. The weekly forecast was for showers with about normal temperatures.

A local long was credited with having sold out a line of oats during the day and with pressure from houses with northwestern connections prices declined around 1c from Friday and closed at the bottom with net losses of ⅝@1⅛c. September finished at 34⅝c, and December at 40@40⅛c.

Rye showed more resistance to selling pressure than other grains, and finished ⅝c higher to ⅛c lower, with September the strongest, closing at 56c, while December was 60c. Some rye is being withdrawn from store for industrial purposes in place of corn.

Natural Gas Is Sensation of Last Year

BY SCRUTATOR.

The most spectacular business development during the last year, generally one of quietude, has been the rising importance of the natural gas branch of the utilities industry.

When the ambitious piping programs to some of the country's largest cities are completed effects that reach much farther than the mere substitution of nature's brand of gas for the kind that is made in the gas house may be expected. Smokeless cities, theoretically, may come if some predictions concerning the cheapness and excellent qualities of this fuel are borne out in large scale practice.

From 1921 to 1928 the annual consumption of natural gas more than doubled in the United States. The federal oil conservation board estimated that another 15 per cent increase occurred last year, bringing the total to more than 1,800 billion cubic feet. This year, even if the consumption fails to go up at the normal rate, the facilities for transportation of the supply to large centers will have made much more than a normal rise.

60,000 Miles of Pipe.

Already there are 60,000 miles of pipe carrying natural gas. Estimates place the number of trunk miles to be added by the close of 1930 at 9,000. Companies building pipe for these lines have been struggling to get out large orders and have been described as the mainstay of the steel industry for some months. Heretofore, the distribution of natural gas has been largely confined to the areas of the gas and oil pools, to California, to the southwest and to the Alleghenies. In the last three years only have the pipe lines been stretched to great distances.

Now transmission systems are being laid from the Louisiana field to St. Louis, 450 miles; from Oklahoma to Chicago and other cities, 1,250 miles, and from Louisiana to Atlanta, 420 miles.

Why the years passed without the developments now in progress would make an interesting story. Seemingly the vision of financiers was long in arriving. Likewise newer and more economical methods of making larger and stronger pipes were necessary. Now there is a veritable flood of information concerning the ample supplies, the cheapness, and the high heating qualities of natural gas. Never a month passes without some company asking official approval somewhere for the building of a line.

50 to 100 Year Supply.

The supply, according to various authorities, will last from fifty to several hundred years. Even the shorter one is long enough to look ahead. The average British thermal unit content of natural gas is stated to be 1,100 per cubic foot, more than twice that of manufactured gas on the average. Obviously nature's product is cheaper at the well than man made gas at the plant.

As for transportation cost, here is what G. E. Barrett & Co., an investment house, says in a new pamphlet:

"Transmission can be profitably carried out in some instances as low as 2½ cents a thousand cubic feet for 100 miles. Present developments in pipe line construction and increasing efficiency of modern compressor stations, which actually have made possible the transportation of gas long distances, indicate that this figure may be even further lowered."

Four-fifths of the natural gas used in the past has been taken by industries; the remainder by domestic customers. The oil industry, with plants near the fields, has consumed 44 per cent of it. The new lines will widen the consuming public. They may take markets from the coal producers by hundreds of cars a day in Chicago if the forecasts of the more optimistic concerning the economy and convenience of natural gas are accurate.

REQUEST AID IN U. S. AS LONDON MARKET LIMPS

Bond Offerings Show Seasonal Gain.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Sept. 13.—With the bond market now beginning to show definite signs of autumn activity, at least in so far as domestic bonds and new domestic financing is concerned, Wall street investment houses are being besieged with applications for new loans from many foreign governments and corporations. With the bond market practically at a standstill in London, prospective borrowers are turning to New York for accommodation. It is currently estimated that foreign borrowers are in debt some $400,000,000 to $500,000,000 to American banks, these debts being in the form of short term advances or credits.

In the event of an improvement in the market here for foreign bonds, it is calculated that a substantial portion of these short term loans will be refunded by long term bond issues. A number of these loans have already been renewed several times pending an opportunity to market bond issues.

Bond Methods Differ.

In view of the competition which has existed in recent years between New York and London bankers in the foreign loan field, it is important to note that the methods of bond distribution in these two centers are vastly different. British bankers who have been in Wall street recently to study conditions have been unanimous in stating that American methods could never be employed successfully in Lombard street.

In London, it is quite customary for the bankers to officially announce the percentage of a given issue of bonds left on their hands after the first day or two of offering. It is not considered any reflection on the standing of an investment house to be called upon to state that 90 per cent of an issue has been left on the hands of the underwriters. Here such an admission would tend to discourage further sales.

Risk Firms Step In.

Such a statement in London, however, would be the signal for an offer to purchase all or a substantial part of the remaining bonds from an insurance company or an investment trust, presumably at a figure below the original public offering price. This is possible in England for the reason that insurance companies are far less restricted in the type of securities which they may purchase than here where life companies and savings banks are subject to a set list of securities prepared by the various state banking departments. Here, of course, fire insurance companies have far more leeway than life companies.

Owing to the concentration of the English population within a comparatively small compass, as compared with the United States, a larger percentage of given issues of bonds are actually sold by the members of a syndicate in London than comparable issues in New York. In the United States many large Wall street houses have branch offices throughout the country, which, coupled with a myriad of independent bond houses in numerous cities, tends to make dealer distribution an important factor.

Market Picks Up.

Indicative of the seasonal improvement in the bond market, new offerings of bonds this week showed a sharp increase over the preceding weeks, with a total of $142,606,000. This compares with $53,389,000 last week and $72,553,000 the previous week. During the corresponding week last year $152,695,000 of new issues were marketed. This week's total is the largest since the second week in July, when a total of $153,092,000 of new bond issues were offered to the public.

For the first time since April offering was made this week of an issue of obligations of an investment corporation, that of $40,000,000 Corporation Securities company of Chicago 4½ and 5 per cent notes, due Sept. 1, 1931 to

A. W. ROBERTSON SAYS RECOVERY DUE IN TRADE

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Sept. 13.—Business as a whole has been on about a straight line for some weeks, according to A. W. Robertson, chairman of the board of directors of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company, who believes that the bottom has been reached and that recovery is now due.

A. W. ROBERTSON.

"I doubt if there will be any skyrocket recovery such as occurred following other periods of depression, notably in 1922, and look for a slower, more orderly, and possibly a more permanent return to normal conditions," he said.

The general industrial demand for electrical equipment has been good this year, Mr. Robertson says, due to the fact that numerous large companies have been engaged in modernizing their plants, involving installations of electrical apparatus to replace machinery motivated by other types of power.

SAYS INDUSTRIAL BUILDING COSTS AT 8-YEAR LOW

Industrial building costs are the lowest in eight years, according to a survey of the Austin company, engineers and builders. Except for a period in 1922 costs have not been so low since 1916.

All of the decline is due largely to falling prices of materials and greater efficiency of labor and construction equipment, it is reported. Wage rates at 185 per cent over the 1913 level continue at the peak for all time, while all building costs, including labor, are less than 40 per cent over 1913.

A modern factory building, 200 feet long and 100 feet wide, of steel and concrete construction, can be erected in the average midwestern city for $1.40 a square foot, against $1.87 in 1922, a high mark of $2.65 in 1920 and $1.00 in 1913.

CHICAGO BANK STOCK DEMAND PICKS UP; PRICES MOVE UPWARD

Chicago bank stocks on an increased demand showed sizable gains last week. Continental Illinois Bank and Trust advanced 20 points to high sales at 638, closing in good demand at 632 bid, 635 asked. Foreman-State National advanced 10 points at 631 to 634. First National improved 10 points to sales between 628 and 632.

National Bank of the Republic was a point lower at 117½ to 118½. The rights were unchanged at 1⅝ to 1⅞. Central Trust of Illinois advanced on small turnover from early sales at 360 to 364 bid, 370 asked. Guardian National lost 2 points, being in supply at 76. Harris Trust and Savings improved 10 points to sales between 700 and 710.

Ask Sale of Cornstalk Products Co. Property

Danville, Ill., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Petition to sell the property of the Cornstalk Products company, including the plant and equipment located at Tilton, was drafted Saturday in United States District court by the receivers, F. E. Butcher and Clint C. Tilton of this city. Judge Walter C. Lindley set the hearing on the petition for Sept. 27, and directed the receivers to notify all the stockholders and creditors of the company, the headquarters of which are in New York City.

The company was thrown into a federal receivership on May 27 by Dr. Elton Darling, former head of the laboratory at the Tilton plant. The receivers state in the petition that $3,500,000 has been expended in experimental work and the purchase of land and buildings and the liabilities will amount to more than $700,000, the immediate sale of the plant and equipment being necessary for the preservation of the best interests of the creditors and stockholders.

Tells How to Cut Costs of Freight Cars

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Sept. 13.—American railroads can reduce the cost of rolling stock from twenty to twenty-five per cent through the adoption of standardized freight cars, is the statement of J. Leonard Replogle, wartime "steel administrator" for the United States government, and former owner of the Cambria Steel company.

Mr. Replogle, who has just completed a short visit in France and England, is returning to New York on the Majestic and on his arrival will then prepare a report for the adoption of common types of the ordinary freight cars in use on the various railway lines throughout the country.

"All freight cars must generally be of the same size, in order to be able to be operated over all lines," he said, "but every railroad insists on certain minor changes in the types it orders and owns.

New Plans Required.

"You couldn't sell a Pennsylvania gondola to the New York Central for five cents and vice versa.

"The result is that every time a large railroad asks for bids on a contract to sell a certain number of cars, estimates have to be made up on plans drawn for that particular line's requirements.

"The blue prints are made and the shops get started and just about the time the maximum capacity of that particular plant has been reached, the order is filled, and the entire system is disrupted, while plans and arrangements for another block of cars are prepared for another line.

"I do not hesitate to state that the saving would reach 20 per cent and perhaps 25 per cent if the lines would agree among themselves on standard types of cars and order them in that way.

Would Permit Surplus.

"This would permit car builders to construct surplus of cars of various models for delivery when ordered, the railroad's name merely being stenciled on the sides.

"Eventually the scheme could be extended to passenger cars, but probably every railroad will continue to develop its own locomotives distinctly. However, this is not such a problem as locomotives stay on their own lines and it is only cars which must be interchangeable.

"Think of the saving in parts for repairs, and for rebuilding of freight cars with a uniform model in use. Depots of parts could be maintained at various distributing points throughout the United States for repair work."

BANK CLEARINGS FALL SHARPLY; OFF 38.7 PCT.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Sept. 13.—Bank clearings have declined sharply and fell this week to below levels at this period for the last three or four years. At New York City clearings of $5,423,000,000 were 43.9 per cent under last year's, while the aggregate at leading centers outside of New York of $2,707,110,000 is 24.8 per cent less.

STOCK EXCHANGE RULING CLOSES PROFIT AVENUE

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Sept. 13.—Indiscriminate trading in unissued securities on a when issued basis is forbidden by the New York Stock exchange under a new ruling made public. This action closes to speculators an avenue of profit that was used to a large extent before the collapse of the bull market last fall.

Under the new order, promulgated at the direction of the committee on business conduct, member firms are prohibited from accepting orders to buy or sell on a when issued basis unless the customary margin requirements are met.

"It has been drawn to the attention of the committee," says a notice sent to member firms, "that transactions on a when issued basis have been accepted by members without margin for a certain class of clients upon written acknowledgement of the contracts."

In the opinion of the committee any such practice is not permissible under the section of the rules which stipulates that "the acceptance and carrying of an account for a customer whether a member or nonmember without proper and adequate margin, may constitute an act detrimental to the interest or welfare of the exchange."

BY FRED HARVEY.

New York, Sept. 13.—That "new bear party" which has been the subject of much gossip down Wall street way lately stepped out and leveled a few pot shots at the stock market today. Quite a bit of damage resulted. Many well known issues were cut down for losses of from 1 to 4 points and for a while it appeared as though the list was in for a severe reaction.

However, speculators for the advance rushed in with supporting orders and were able to halt the drive, but not before it had succeeded in adding considerable casualties to yesterday's total. Most of the pivotals managed to break even or better on the day so that the net result of all the excitement—or what passes for it in these dull times—was nothing worse than an irregular closing.

The rally was led by a group of such issues as United States Steel and Westinghouse, both of which sold back to above their Friday closing levels at one stage of the late trading. At the windup steel was unchanged and the other was off a small fraction.

Market Gets New Heart.

Bethlehem Steel also distinguished itself in the "comeback," being bid up above its previous closing level on fairly active trading. The fact that the reaction got no further than it did and was followed by a good recovery created a favorable impression in market circles and served to give new heart to those speculative stalwarts who have been holding out so doggedly against reactionary forces in the hopes of ultimate support from a public so long ago frightened out of the running.

Today's raid, sudden as it was, was not altogether unexpected. For several days recently the action of the list, particularly as concerned the pivotal industrials, which had been unable to record additional progress since the appearance of the disappointing steel tonnage figures on Wednesday, had suggested the existence of something of an overbought and topheavy condition. Wall street had been looking for something in the way of a corrective movement.

Not at Best.

Having been robbed of much of its technical strength through the steady retirement of the short account up to the middle of the week, the market was not in the best shape to withstand the vicious thrusts aimed at it.

UNITED FOUNDERS CORPORATION

Organized Investing

PUBLIC UTILITIES Gross revenues of the electric light and power industry in the United States have increased each year for the past decade. The annual rate of increase has varied from 7% to 18%, and the average per year has been 10.8%. The uses for electricity are constantly increasing. More people are buying electricity, and the average consumer is buying more of it. In varying degree this growth applies to other utilities, such as gas, telephone, water and transportation. No industry can be said to be more certain of continued prosperity.

United Founders Corporation has large investments in the field of public utilities. In May, 1930, its holdings in this field included 23 investments of more than $100,000 each in securities of American companies, and 17 such holdings in foreign countries. Smaller investments were held in 40 additional utility securities. United Founders Corporation and subsidiaries have substantial holdings in common stocks in five major fields of investment: Public Utilities, Banks, Insurance Companies, Railroads, and Investment Companies. LONDON STOCKS SLOW UP AFTER RECENT GAINS

Caution Is Now Evident in Market.

BY SIDNEY CAVE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Sept. 13.—The optimistic activity of the last two weeks has received a check and compared with the recent cheerfulness the stock markets show a decided evidence of application of brakes.

The recent rise of the whole industrial shares section proved too rapid to last and the present tone of the speculative sections are looking subdued. The prevailing pessimism of the last few months has been largely dispersed but there is still an undercurrent of uncertainty, although there is a general atmosphere of mild confidence with apparent signs that the market is ready to respond to any good news.

The insiders are now of the opinion, except perhaps for gold and mining shares, that the justification for a general improvement in securities does not exist until there are definite indications of a real trade improvement combined with a rally of commodity and base metal prices. The business being conducted is a good deal cautious, investors again turning their attention to gilt edged securities which, after an earlier setback, are again displaying marked strength.

Some Gloomy Views.

THE TRIBUNE'S discussions with industrialists and economists show that some leaders are taking a gloomy view of the coming winter's prospects regarding an improvement of trade. It is not believed, however, that the price will slip back to the low level earlier recorded.

The foreign exchange market has shown considerable erratic movements, the sterling-dollar rate especially fluctuating sharply, although winding up with a strong recovery, which the dealers attribute to the quietness of business on Wall street and the continued American investment in British funds. Partly due to the latter, the British government issues made a notable recovery from earlier dullness. To check the upward movement industrials turned their attention again to the gilt edged stocks, the recovery being assisted by some fresh investment buying on a fairly large scale by the big banks.

The support for certain leading British funds was quite influential, and in view of the monetary outlook the belief still prevails that the government may be encouraged to attempt a conversion loan and offer a 5 per cent war loan. The latter has risen again virtually to new highs over 104, while good support has lifted the conversion 5s well over 105 again.

Regarded Favorably.

Among the foreign government bonds Argentina is not much affected by the political developments and the stock exchange seems to regard the change of government favorably. Brazilian Sao Paulo issues absorbed considerable attention owing to the better tendency of milreis, while Mexican loans reflected speculative interest in Wall street in anticipation of fresh debt settlement developments.

Many new capital issues under contemplation are awaiting a favorable opportunity for emission. The general impression offers high class investment good reception.

The rubber situation shows up slightly better with the end of the week improvement representative of rubber shares, coincident with the rise of commodities to over eight cents per pound. Large quantities of rubber have been taken off the market and, although the outlook is still obscure, there is a more hopeful feeling that rubber will gradually surmount the present difficulties.

QUIET IN PARIS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Sept. 13.—Following the example of the New York market, which was hesitant Thursday after a session of real firmness, the Paris bourse over the week-end showed little activity. Prices were irregular, although the previous session was remarkable for a decidedly favorable tendency. This trend did not surprise financial circles here who maintain that certain solidarity exists between all big financial markets which it would be difficult to break.

However, the calm prevailing on the Paris market can be explained by several considerations. The fact that the Paris market will next week be confronted with midmonth settlements, very probably dominated by the German election results, has certainly had some influence on professional speculation.

Bond Market in New York Has Seasonal Gain.

1935. The notes were priced to yield 4.50@5.75 per cent.

Chicago Issue Largest.

New state and municipal financing this week, aggregating $50,056,000, was the largest for this type of bond since mid-May. A total of fifteen state and municipal issues were marketed this week, ranging in size from $92,000 to $23,735,000. The largest issue was that of city of Chicago 5¾ and 6 per cent notes, due Aug. 15 to Dec. 15, 1930, prices to net 5 per cent. The next issue in size was $5,000,000 state of Missouri 4s, due 1943 to 1947, offered at a price of 101¼.

Seven public utility bond issues, totaling $30,550,000, were placed on the market, the largest of which was $15,000,000 Electric Power and Light corporation 5s, due in 100 years, offered on a 5.40 per cent basis. This week's railroad financing comprised two issues, one of $12,000,000 for the Chicago and North Western Railway company and the other of $10,000,000 for the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway company. A large part of the latter was placed privately.

Offers by Divisions.

Offerings of bonds by groups for this and last week follow:

	This week.	Last week.
State and municipal	$50,056,000	$6,075,000
Investment corp	40,000,000	.....
Public utility	30,550,000	42,264,000
Railroad	22,000,000	.....
Foreign	.....	4,650,000
Totals	$142,606,000	$53,889,000

Although no industrial financing was done this week, it is understood that several large issues are being groomed for early offering. These, it is understood, will be relatively high grade, for the reason that the current demand favors such issues, despite the fact that many second and third grade bonds are selling at prices to afford very high yields.

Business Recovery—When?

JUST as an era of rising prices creates a wave of buying beyond immediate needs, so a period of falling prices, such as we have been going through, curtails purchases below normal needs and business suffers from a "buyers' strike".

19 TOWNS SHOW AUGUST GAIN IN BUILDING

Glen Ellyn in the Lead: 1,390% Over July.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

Building construction volume in forty-five suburbs in Chicagoland for the month of August amounted to $3,198,150 which represents a gain of 1 per cent over the July volume of $3,164,658.

Nineteen individual suburbs in the Chicago area registered gains for August over July, according to a survey just completed by S. W. Straus & Co. Nine of them were over 100 per cent.

Glen Ellyn, out in Du Page county, was headliner in the honor list with a jump of 1,390 per cent in its August figures as compared with the month preceding. Elmwood Park was second, with a gain of 1,329 per cent.

Niles Center Gains.

The other optimistically inclined suburbs were Niles Center, with an increase of 1,098 per cent; St. Charles, with a 933.7 per cent gain; Aurora, with a 584 per cent advance and Kenilworth with a rise of 283 per cent.

Libertyville was seventh in the list with an increase in August over July of 272.2 per cent. Highland Park came eighth with an advance of 134.9 per cent. Ten other towns registered gains of less than 100 per cent. These latter were: Berwyn, Blue Island, Dolton, Elgin, Forest Park, Hinsdale, Joliet, Park Ridge, Waukegan and West Chicago.

In the comparison of August of this year with August of 1929, which had a volume of $5,092,117, a loss of 37 per cent is shown. Substantial gains, however, were made by several towns individually. Lombard registered an increase of 187.9 per cent, the largest in the list. Kenilworth came second with an advance of 169.6 per cent.

Aurora Is Third.

Aurora was third with 154 per cent; then came Lake Forest, 116.9; Joliet, 110.8; East Chicago, 54.3; Niles Center, 46.7; Batavia, 34.5; Homewood, 34.5, and Hinsdale, 23.2. These individual increases are significant, for last year's figures have been consistently higher than those recorded this year.

Following are the comparative building figures for the Chicago suburbs:

A healthy condition is shown by some of the suburbs in that they register gains both in the comparison with the previous month and with the same month a year ago. Lombard, Aurora, Hinsdale, Joliet, Kenilworth, Niles Center, and East Chicago are the winners of this distinction.

PLAN $750,000 BUILDING FOR 71ST-JEFFERY

Lease School Board Site for 99 Years.

Work is scheduled to start within thirty days on a $750,000 six story fireproof store, office and flat building in the Bryn Mawr district, at the scutheast corner of 71st street and Jeffery avenue. This is diagonally across from the Illinois Central Bryn Mawr station. The owners are Joseph P. The site, fronting 115½ feet on East 71st and 275 feet on Jeffery, has been leased for ninety-nine years from the school board. The lease, which is dated Oct. 1, 1930, calls for an annual rental of $14,000 the first ten years; then $16,500 for the next ten, and $17,500 for the following decade. For the remainder of the term the rental will be 7 per cent of a revaluation made every ten years.

The new building will have bowling alleys in the basement and twelve stores on the first floor. In the rear of the first floor a miniature golf course is planned. On the second floor offices will occupy the front space. In the rear and on the third, fourth, fifth and sixth floors will be one, two and three room apartments.

The structure will be of buff face brick on all sides and plate glass will be used throughout, according to Mr. Walsh. Completion is set for May 1, 1921.

PLANS COUNCIL TO LEAD FIGHT ON OPEN SHOP

Flat Janitors' Union Head Is Leader.

BY THOMAS WREN.

Formation of a council of Chicago trade union leaders to combat open shop propaganda is being completed by Jerry J. Horan, the head of the Flat Janitors' union and president of the International Building Service Employés' union. Mr. Horan announced that labor representatives from each large group of trade unionists will be selected and then requested to serve on the executive council.

JERRY J. HORAN. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

He stated the central body will function to prevent the legitimate trade union movement from being made the target of unwarranted and biased attacks. He cited the murder of a building superintendent on some non-union construction at 59th street and Blackstone avenue to illustrate the necessity of a combat council.

"Play Both Ends of Game."

Horan said the charge was made in the Chicago press and never refuted that the slaying was due to the fact that the man was a nonunion worker. Investigators learned the man was killed over some triangle affair and had nothing to do with the labor movement.

"Under the guise of performing duty of a civic nature many of these professional open shop agents play both ends of the game," said Horan.

"The depict trade unionism as a menace to anti-labor employers while their propaganda against the American trade union movement consists of trying to associate it with rackets and racketeers."

Will Search Records.

Horan stated one of the main functions of the contemplated labor council will be to conduct a research into the records of all professional open shop propagandists. He said when the work is completed a detailed report of these records will be submitted to newspaper publishers within a five hundred mile radius of Chicago. These publishers will be requested to use the data in guiding publication of further anti-trade union propaganda.

Horan, since becoming head of the Flat Janitors' union, has made it compulsory for all members of his union to become American citizens. He says this action was essential to create the proper respect and love for American institutions and traditions.

HOME BUILDING AND REMODELING

A SMALL HOUSE WHICH ACHIEVES CHARM OF OWN

BY LOUISE BARGELT.
[Home Builders Editor.]

More and more frequently of late years we are shown instances of small suburban and city homes ingeniously designed and given distinct individuality and charm.

In this case a dwelling is pictured adapted to a level site which is far more than merely one of a "row of houses"; a dwelling which, through interesting selection of materials and their skillful adaptation to a certain type of architecture, manages to achieve a gracious distinction all its own.

This six room house is in the English style, a style usually a wise selection for small or large home because of the ease with which it can adapt itself to American needs and desires. It has been designed by Alexis A. Zakharoff, architect, 431 South Dearborn, Chicago.

A cobble stone walk offers the approach to the house, while stone steps lead up to a small semi-enclosed porch.

Half Timber Work.

The exterior is of face brick laid in cement waterproofed mortar and secured with asphalt dipped metal ties. Half timber is employed on the second floor elevation and gables. The multi colored roof is of asbestos shingles and the windows are of steel casement of extra heavy type.

The colors available in face brick today include practically the spectrum in their range; from pure white through all the grays to black, from pale cream to deep yellow, from salmon pink to Burgundy red.

The floor plan of the house interior is laid out to fill the various needs of the small family without being cut up and given a cramped and crowded effect.

Opening on the large, square hall, which one enters from the semi-enclosed porch, is the large living room with dining room beyond. Both rooms have cork tile floors, walls of textured plastic paint, tinted and glazed with oil paint for beauty and permanence. The lighting fixtures are in harmony with the English type and are of wrought bronze. Throughout the house, hollow metal door frames are employed, with full seasoned birch one panel doors.

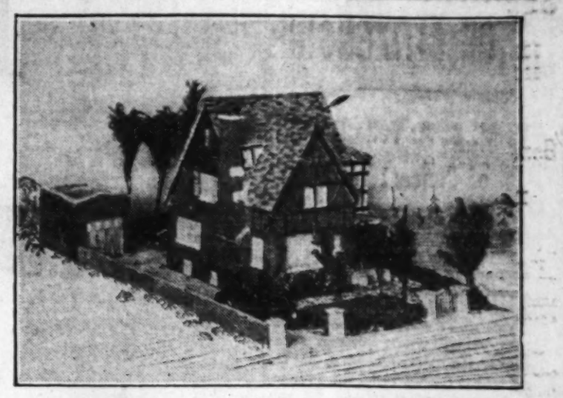
Rubber Tile Flooring.

The floors in the hall and kitchen are of rubber tile. Oak flooring is specified on the floor above excepting in the bath, which is of tile.

Practical construction details which bear important relationship to the comfort and permanence of the home have been included in the building.

Walls and roof are insulated, steel joists are used for all the floors, while the steel ornamental staircases have cork tile covering. Roller or sliding type of copper bronze screens are installed in all the windows. The house is heated with a hot air furnace built of heavy copper alloy steel plates, and there is a thirty gallon water tank with gas water heater. There are damp proof foundations with concrete footings. Minimum width of lot as suggested by architect is 50 feet. Up to date bathroom and kitchen equipment is provided, electric refrigeration, modern sink, ventilation, lighting and plumbing.

A HINT FROM ENGLAND



Usually a wise selection, the English style of architecture, because of the ease with which it can be adapted to the small home. In this case the house has six rooms well laid out to fill the various needs of the small family. The exterior is of face brick laid in cement waterproofed mortar, with half timber employed on second floor elevation and gables. The steep roof is of variegated asbestos shingles. The house, it is claimed, may be built for around $12,000. Designed by Alexis A. Zakharoff, architect, 431 South Dearborn street, Chicago.

FIND COMMUNITY SINGING BUILDS UP CITIZENSHIP

Y. M. C. A. Tells Results of Concert Work.

BY THE REV. JOHN EVANS.

To make law abiding American citizens out of Chicago's increasing foreign population, get them to sing American songs.

This is no theory, according to Abraham Bowers, Americanization secretary of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. He referred to the success of the Chicagoland music festival of Aug. 23, and told of the 360,000 people, drawn almost exclusively from foreign groups who attended open air singing Americanization meetings, principally in the stock yards and central manufacturing section, held under Y. M. C. A. direction during the last summer.

Proof that music is one of the most effective methods in establishing civic decency was pointed out by Mr. Bowers in the fact that "the stock yards and central manufacturing district of Chicago formerly was the criminal center of the city and was continually in the crime headlines of the newspapers."

Great Improvement Shown.

"This is obviously not so today," said Mr. Bowers. "In fact, I know that saloons in that area, in a number of cases, are having hard times to exist. The crime center has moved away from the stock yards and is now found among the river wards. Executives of the packing concerns, particularly Armours and Swifts, are elated over the results we have had in the last 15 years."

Mr. Bowers mentioned especially the comments of H. G. Ellerd of Armour & Co., as he quoted the packer's testimony, saying that "the 500,000 people living in the general area will be found by investigation to be the best voting group in the entire city."

The best community singing among the foreign groups is found in Lithuanian, Bohemian, Polish, and Slovak sections, Mr. Bowers said. More than 10,000 have gathered for an evening sing on the Community Methodist Episcopal church grounds, South Lincoln and 50th streets, according to Y. M. C. A. attendance check, while an average of more than 5,000 were recorded at 11 meetings at various parks since June 30.

As he described a typical meeting, Mr. Bowers said it begins at dark, usually between 8:30 and 9, but the people start gathering long before that, just as they did at Soldiers' field for Chicagoland Music Festival, in order to get a good place. Community singing opens the program.

Sing with Hearty Will.

"And how those people do sing!" Mr. Bowers exclaimed. "The selection is made from the songs the children are taught in school, songs of the native lands of the national groups, and, finally, with the old country hymns and folk song in the background, America's great hymns are sung. This forms the background for the evening Americanization lecture."

But the crowds are too large for a spoken lecture, Mr. Bowers explained. Therefore, the stereoptican is used. Pictures are thrown on a great screen with written titles which give the story of American ideals and that develop the spirit of law abiding patriotism. Mr. Bower explained the theme of the lectures this summer was "Better Government for Chicago." The first lectures were historical in character, showing Chicago's growth, development and civic background. A review of immigration movements which have affected American growth and life was depicted on the screens. Later, the principles of American democracy were illustrated.

"Men who quarrel cannot stick together."

"Government helps men to stick together."

"Government tries to enforce rules to make all men honest with each other."

"America will be a great country as long as men stick together."

"In a democracy government is everybody's business."

"Every citizen has a voice in our government and must help run it."

"At each election we have a chance to express ourselves, and must do it."

"Voting is the most sacred thing in our national life."

"Obedience to our laws is also sacred."

"In a democracy we should feel insulted if any one tries to buy our votes."

"Can we expect good government if we sell our votes?"

BOY AND GIRL REDS OPEN DRIVE FOR SOVIET ZEPPELIN

[Copyright: 1930: By the New York Times.]

MOSCOW, Sept. 13.—As a result of the Graf Zeppelin's visit to Moscow a plan is afoot to build a soviet Zeppelin. Contributions are being solicited to this end, and young pioneers [boy and girl communists] are being enlisted to go about and collect money.

Another feature of the flight is wonder on the part of the peasants, who saw the giant airship fly over their farms.

One wrote to a Moscow paper reporting that at 8 o'clock in the morning he had seen a big silver cloud flying toward Moscow and he asked for an explanation of the phenomenon.

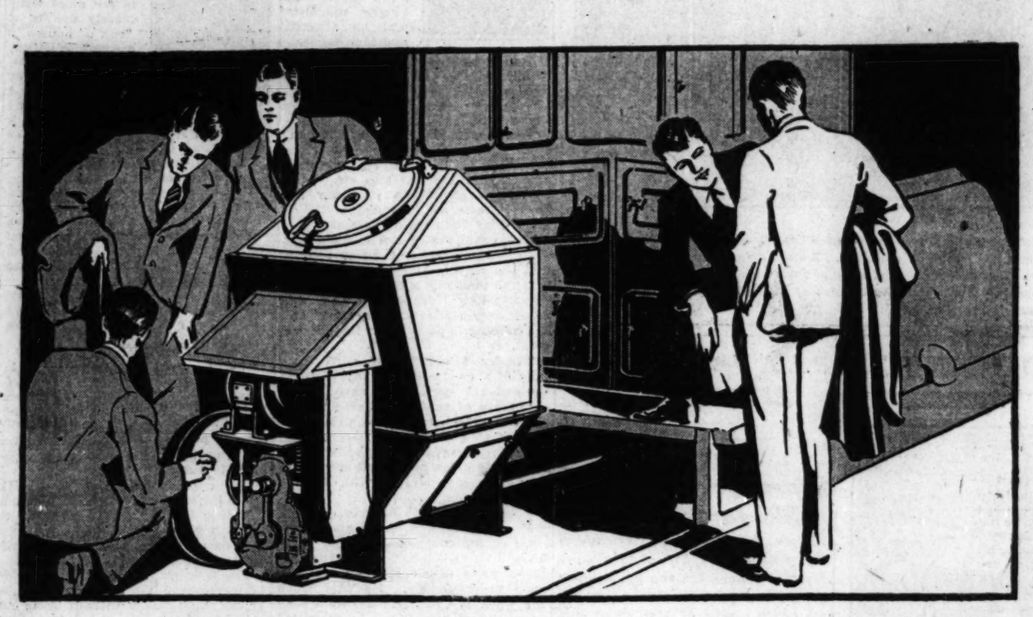
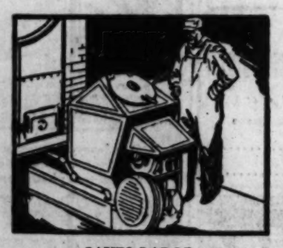
IRON FIREMAN cuts users fuel bills 1/3



Actual figures from 497 typical users reveal astonishing economies of Iron Fireman scientific firing

PREVENTS SMOKE

All the energy in the volatile coal gases is turned into useful heat. Their complete combustion is assured by their passage through the incandescent fuel bed. Smoke is prevented. There is no smoke nuisance where Iron Fireman does the firing.



SAVES LABOR

Iron Fireman requires only a fraction of the labor of hand firing. The fireman can do other work. The saving in labor costs is an additional source of profit for Iron Fireman users, and often is an important item of saving.

USERS' HAVE spoken. From their own records, 497 representative and typical users have supplied their comparative fuel cost figures. Former yearly fuel bills have been accurately compared with yearly fuel bills after installing the Iron Fireman. The report covers users of the Iron Fireman in 41 states and Canada. They represent 15 different types of industries and buildings.

The average fuel cost saving (in installations other than residences) was 31.62 per cent. This represents an annual earning of 39.44 per cent on these users' investments in Iron Fireman Automatic Coal Burners. A similar survey among home owners using the Iron Fireman showed average fuel cost savings of 45.61 per cent.

The Iron Fireman is made in a range of sizes which adapt it to any firing job, from the home furnace up to large commercial heating and power plants. It burns small size coal which costs less per ton.

Using the smaller sizes of coal which cost far less per ton, Iron Fireman creates firebox temperatures 500 to 1000 degrees hotter than hand firing. The application of the principle of non-agitated forced underfiring makes this possible. Such combustion results in wonderful efficiencies. Users claim the fuel cost savings alone write Iron Fireman off their books in an average of 30 months!

Write for booklet explaining the mechanics and operation of Iron Fireman. Or for quick action ask us to make an engineering survey of your furnace or boiler room, showing what an Iron Fireman will earn for you. No obligation. Use the coupon.

BURNS SCIENTIFICALLY

Turn a candle upside down and watch it smoke and waste fuel. That same thing happens when coal is thrown on top of a fire. Fuel fed from below, the Iron Fireman way, is scientific and correct. Make this test for yourself.

EVEN HEAT OR POWER

Iron Fireman is operated by automatic instruments which enable it to control room or water temperature, or boiler pressure. Steady, even heat or power is thus automatically assured. This superior heating is in itself a potential source of increased production and better business.

Feed Them Right and How They Grow

Look at this proud mother and father measuring their boy's height on Thompson's Life Line Chart. No wonder they are happy!

Two years ago the lad was two inches under average height for his age—and even ten pounds under weight for his height. But now he's up to normal in height and even a few pounds over average in weight. How did this boy make this astonishing progress?

Just one simple change accomplished the whole thing. Instead of urging him to drink a glass of raw milk two or three times a day mother added two teaspoonsful of Thompson's Chocolate Malted Milk to the raw milk. After that he needed no urging.

The added food value in Thompson's gave this boy the extra nourishment he needed to grow at the proper rate. Sturdier bones and stronger muscles came naturally. His stomach very easily handled the additional food in this form, because Thompson's "Double Malted" process makes the most quickly digestible food.

Serve it at Home

Thompson's now prepare a special "Double Malted" Malted Milk already mixed with powdered chocolate to serve at home in a jiffy. Two teaspoonsful in a glass of milk—a little shaking—that's all. Your druggist or grocer will be glad to deliver right now, today, the one pound can of this new Thompson's Chocolate "Double Malted". Order it now. Give it to your children for luncheon. It's so delicious it will make them eager for that best of all foods—milk. And it will do wonders for their health because Thompson's adds 76% to the food value of milk. 'Phone your grocer or druggist now.

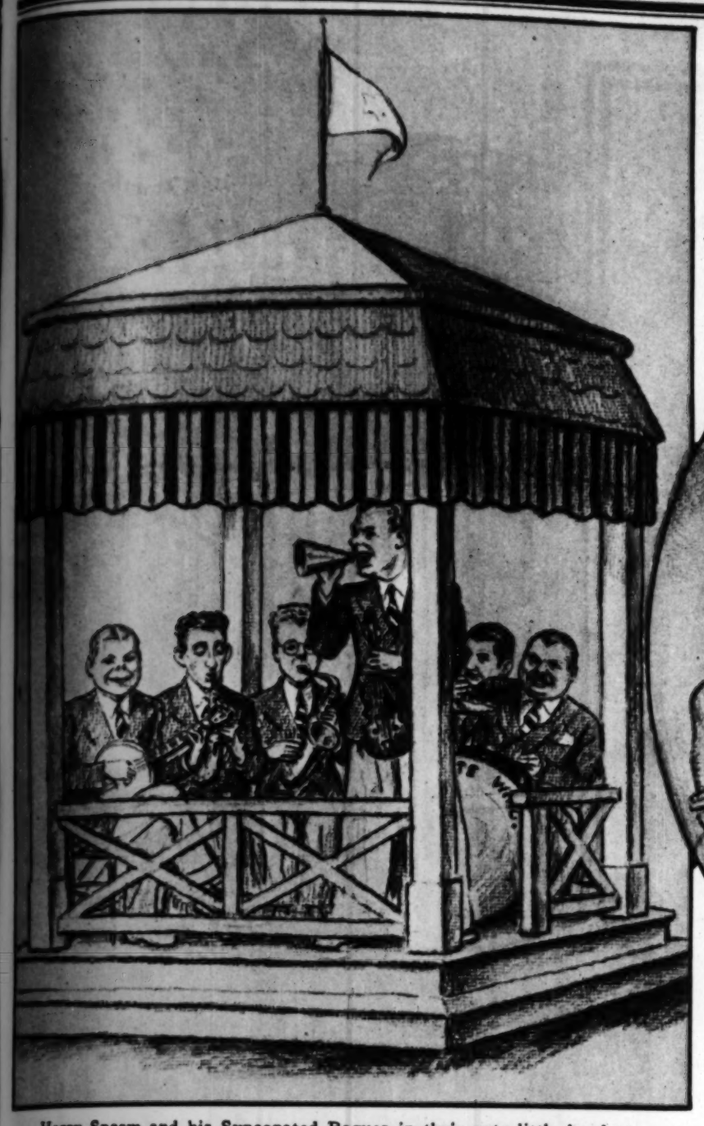
The Beach Club

By W. E. Hill

[Copyright: 1930: By The Chicago Tribune.]



Harry Spasm and his Syncopated Rogues in their cute little band pavilion at the Wretched Harbor Beach club. Harry and his gay rogues are livening up a Sunday afternoon crowd with a rendition of "Ten Cents a Dance."

The really elect of a beach club are those fortunate members who have their family cabana, where they can sit and look daggers at the hoi polloi during the fashionable bathing hour. The cabana is just another name for the bungalow named "Kamp O-So-Kosy," or even "Kamp Kil-Kare" at the cheaper beaches.

The first family. The St. John Gilliwinkles are very noblesse oblige and have more millions to back it up than you can shake a stick at. In fact, they are so very noblesse oblige that they pretty near run everything around the Wretched Harbor Beach club. (Only the very rich and very noble could get away with the bathing outfits worn by the St. John Gilliwinkles.)

"Don't you think it's a shame, Annette, that they won't allow the men to go without their bathing tops, the way the men do in Europe? Because, really, the human form is very beautiful if you look at it rightly!"

"I don't object to her, Madge, she's a sweet little thing and all that; but I object to the terrible nobodies she'll bring here if she's elected a member!" (Just two lovely charter members getting ready to blackball some one.)

The cocktails are beginning to have their effect, and Rolf and his hostess are having just the nicest time on the beach of the Wretched Harbor club.

A beach club membership is invaluable for a host or hostess who tires of the week-end guest and wants to get said party out of the house for a few hours. Here's Marion with a jolly week-ender in tow, sunning her back and limbs at the beach club. (Bert is being comical again. Tickling the soles of Marion's feet and threatening to spank her with a big board.)

Very diffident guest at the beach club who has lost his host, trying not to look like an interloper from the public beach.

A power boat party of beach club revelers, with the usual lady on a surf board, not looking quite up to the pictures of surf riders in the magazine ads.

Weil-McLain Time Payment Finance Plan enables you to purchase Boilers and radiators on convenient terms. It can also be made to cover the purchase of plumbing equipment.

MODERNIZE
your heating plant Now!

This is the time to bring your heating plant up to date if it is old. Boilers have been greatly improved since yours was installed. What is your present heating plant costing—in fuel—in comfort—in health—in troublesome operation? Compare your boiler with these Weil-McLain advantages.

A boiler for modern fuels

The Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler has been designed, not only for the fuel you have been accustomed to use, but for the efficient burning of oil. It is especially suited for oil burning because it provides increased combustion space and heating surface—thus increasing the amount of heat generated and absorbed. Unusually large waterways provide the quickest circulation across the boiler and around all areas of heat concentration—a most important feature in efficient and economical oil heating.

Prices lowest in 10 years
—new time payment plan available!

THE Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler reflects the trend toward color and beauty in the modern basement. It increases the resale value of property wherever it is installed.

When you look past its trim jacket of beautifully enameled steel, you will find many new operating conveniences, together with well-known features common to all Weil-McLain Boilers—features that enable it to fight fuel waste and deliver more heat.

Scientific combustion fights high fuel bills

In the Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler, scientific combustion, made possible by the design of the boiler itself, provides for more thorough final burning of the fuel.

Retarded or incomplete combustion of solid fuels is prevented, because all grates within the fire box are shaking grates and because rounded "live fire" corners in the fire box assure a clean, bright fire at every point. Costly wasting of fuel in the ashpit is stopped.

More heat-absorbing surface saves fuel

There is little purpose in a boiler producing great heat unless it can be utilized before it reaches the chimney. In the Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler, the extra width of the fire box in the combustion zone, combined with drop web construction, adds to the area of heating surface above the fire and materially increases the heat-absorbing ability of the boiler. Thus, more of the heat that is in your fuel is sent to your radiators.

Balanced back-and-forth fire travel ends waste up the chimney

As a final safeguard against waste, the Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler has a balanced back-and-forth fire travel. The hot gases of combustion cannot short-cut to the chimney or concentrate in the center flues. The hot gases must reach all the heating surfaces, thus fighting fuel waste up the chimney.

New operating conveniences

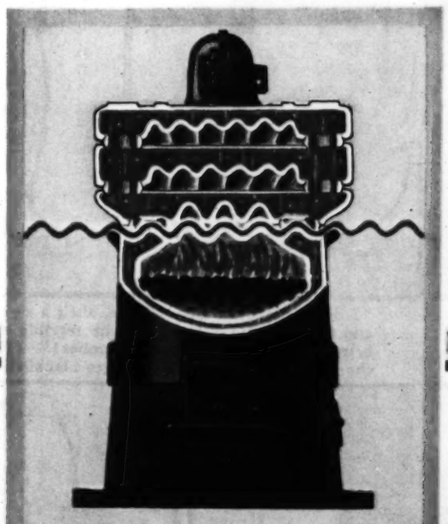
This boiler has convenience features never before combined in a single boiler. These include: a choke damper controlled from the front of the boiler; an unusually high ashpit; automatic draft regulation; added combustion space; and fuel carrying capacity that means lengthened firing periods.

Other superiorities

The Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler has a thoroughly insulated jacket, large flue spaces, generous water spaces, and extra large lower nipple openings. Individual outside tie rods permit uniform assembly of the sections—two washout plugs and a skimming plug are conveniently located. Provision is made for hot water coil and indirect water heater.

See your heating contractor

There are Weil-McLain Boilers to meet all requirements. For complete information, see your heating contractor. Mail the coupon today for valuable new booklets describing Weil-McLain Boilers. Weil-McLain Company, General Offices: 641 W. Lake Street, Chicago. Factories and Offices: Michigan City, Ind.; Erie, Pa.



The Weil-McLain Round Boiler

This boiler is famous for its fuel economy and heating efficiency. It is typical of the many exclusive advantages which Weil-McLain design brings to home owners. For example, the fuel-saving characteristics of Weil-McLain corrugations like these ~~~ have been built into all Weil-McLain Boilers by placing extra heat-absorbing surface directly above the fire, as well as in all other vital heating surfaces—adding materially to their fuel economy.

The dreaded gingival third decay, a form of decay common during pregnancy because of the tendency towards excess acid-

ity. It results from acid attacks near the necks of the teeth, along The Danger Line, where gums meet teeth and where there is a tiny crevice. Fermenting food particles and the acid-form- ing germs of decay collect here, because your tooth-brush can't penetrate such a tiny crevice. There is an old saying that one baby costs two of its mother's teeth.

THE EXPECTANT MOTHER

SHOULD, BY ALL MEANS, KNOW THESE FACTS ABOUT SQUIBB'S DENTAL CREAM

for it is the only type of dentifrice that brings these special benefits to protect the teeth of motherhood

MANY a woman emerges from the trying period of pregnancy with her teeth and gums in bad condition—sometimes she loses one or more teeth. But this certainly need not happen.

During pregnancy, a woman's teeth are unusually susceptible to decay—due, first, to the demands upon the lime stores of her body and, second, to the presence of germ acids in the mouth. Correct food, including the necessary vitamins and mineral salts, and the regular use of Squibb's Dental Cream, will aid in combating decay.

Years ago, physicians and dentists began to advise expectant mothers to use Milk of Magnesia as a mouth wash to combat germ acids. How natural then that today an increasing number of both professions consider Squibb's Dental Cream a valuable aid during pregnancy—far beyond the powers of other types of dentifrices.

It is 50% Squibb's Milk of Magnesia. Each time you brush your teeth with Squibb's you combat germ acids. You force countless particles of Milk of Magnesia into the crevices and fissures of the teeth and render these germ acids harmless.

One of the most vital parts of the mouth is the thin margin of tissue where the gums join the teeth. It is called The Danger Line because it is a real point of danger for everybody. Here pyorrhea starts. Here, also, occurs the dreaded gingival third decay—so prevalent during pregnancy.

Squibb's affords the delicate gum margin wonderful protection. It definitely soothes irritation and helps keep your gums firm and sound. Protects against pyorrhea—for as long as The Danger Line is healthy, pyorrhea will not begin.

How beautifully Squibb's cleans the teeth—and so safely. It contains no grit, no astringents, nothing which might injure the delicate gum edge. Use Squibb's every day. Your teeth will keep so much more attractive and healthy. For you'll be giving your gums the safest of care and your teeth the finest possible protection against decay.

WINGED QUEENS OF TWO FLAGS IN THE YACHTING CLASSIC OF THE DECADE—The Enterprise (at left), Yankee defender of the historic America's cup, and Sir Thomas Lipton's British challenger, Shamrock V., bring the sport of royalty to the coast off Newport, R. I., in their duel for the coveted symbol of yachting supremacy. At the center above, Harold S. Vanderbilt, skipper and chief backer of the Enterprise. The Vanderbilt yacht, chosen as the best all-weather boat among American contenders, revealed revolutionary progress in designing in the last ten years by easy triumphs during the summer over the Resolute, 1920 victor over the Shamrock IV. It was built at a reported cost of $1,000,000; the sails alone, it is said, probably cost as much as Sir Thomas' entire ship.

OUT OF THE PAST—But the beams and rafters which creaked under the strain of wind power milling sixty years ago still ring to the shouts of children who play about it. The mill is on the farm of Henry Brockman, River road and Lawrence avenue.

THE MAKING OF THE MACHINE AGE—In the fitting of gear to the new Wabash avenue bridge, a stern array of cogs and wheels and ponderous steel beams, the photographer finds an eloquent study of the building of the modern metropolis. Soon the last nut will have been tightened into place and the completed bridge will open and close in smooth silence.

ITALY'S NEW FRONTIERS—Fortified walls and gate at Zara, "irredentism's sentinel on the coast of Dalmatia." With its diminutive hinterland, extending like an inverted wedge into the Jugo-Slav hinterland, Zara is described by the Slavs as "an Italian button on the Slav coat tail." The international problems to which it gives rise are discussed in an article appearing in today's Drama section by David Darrah, Tribune correspondent at Rome.

AS ITALIAN AS VENICE IS ZARA, says Mr. Darrah; and he is photographically corroborated by this view of the quays, looking across the straits toward the coastal island fringe and the Adriatic. It is a free port, which doesn't mean that one may eat, drink, and be merry for nothing. One may live like a king, nevertheless, on a handful of lira.

BREWED EXACTLY LIKE the BEER you loved

The best malt-and-hop brew we ever created is at your command today. It is called Atlas Special Brew.

Brewed from the finest barley malt and Bohemian hops. Aged for months, as in the old days. Pasteurized after bottling.

The zest is there, the sparkle and foam, the flavor and aroma. The digestive helps are in it, and the aids to sleep. The tonic qualities, the soothing factors, the delights are there.

Not a Makeshift

Atlas Special Brew is not a "near-beer," not an imitation. Never was a malt-and-hop brew made with more care and skill.

There was never a purer brew. Even the water we use is specially treated to match the brews of Europe. Each bottle is certified.

Less Alcohol—That's All

Less alcohol, of course, but that you will not miss. Were you told that this was an old reserve, you could not discover the difference.

Atlas Special Brew has the old soothing effects. Drink it at bedtime as an aid to sleep. It has the diastase and peptase. Drink it at mealtime as a help to digestion. It has the esters and aldehydes—invigorators. It has the hops. Drink it as a tonic. It has all you loved of flavor and sparkle in the old-time brews.

Don't go without it. Above all, don't substitute with something wretched and impure.

Taste this Atlas Special Brew. It costs only 15c a bottle, much less by the case of 24 bottles, delivered to your door. Just ask your dealer or phone us. Over 30,000 grocers, delicatessen stores and drug stores in Chicago and surrounding states supply it. Look for the green Atlas Special label on each bottle. Atlas Brewing Company, 2107 Blue Island Avenue, Chicago, Ill. brings Old Masters of Oriental Rug Art

Gulistan re-creates Gem of the Victoria and Albert Museum in London

Ask to see 16th Century Hunting Carpet: Gulistan 25094.

This historic design, woven 400 years ago, is known to experts all over the world. "The finest of its kind," says Bode, the great European authority.

This Gulistan in your home will create as much admiration and comment among your friends as its famous original has among connoisseurs.

To those who know, the design reveals the influence of Chinese art in Persia. You will be able to distinguish for yourself the sacrificial vase, the cloud-band border which signifies long and happy life and many other fascinating symbols.

Five different color combinations.

Made in America by the largest Makers of Oriental Rugs

KARAGHEUSIAN

WHEN Gulistan was placed on the market two years ago, a revolution in rug values took place.

The House of Karagheusian had produced in America the silky beauty of an Oriental Rug! The same shimmering sheen! The jewel-like colors! The luxurious deep pile!

Even experts hesitated to tell the difference!

Today, new Gulistans are in the stores. They reveal another amazing development.

Gulistan now places Old Masters of Oriental Rug Art within your reach!

Masterpieces of design originally created for the palaces and mosques of old Persia!

Rugs so cherished by museums that they are really the sentimental property of whole peoples and cannot be purchased even by multi-millionaires!

Moreover, rugs so intricate in design that even reproductions of them in imported Orientals are seldom found!

Does beauty such as this transform a home, a room? One glance gives the answer.

Little wonder that rugs this Fall come ahead of other demands upon the family purse!

But to know exactly what you are getting when you go shopping for rugs, remember these plain facts.

Gulistan is the American product of Karagheusian, the largest makers of Oriental Rugs.

Only Karagheusian can make Gulistan. All rugs so marked come from this famous House.

In Gulistan you have the same sturdy Oriental wool yarns, the finest dyes, the very same finishing processes as you get in their expensive Persian and Chinese rugs.

Naturally, all the best stores have Gulistans. Many of them have arranged art gallery displays to show these beautiful rugs appropriately.

This Fall, when every dollar must buy the supreme value, Gulistan is a veritable gift from advancing science to the woman anxious to beautify her home.

Look on the back of the rug for the silken label pictured below. That is your guarantee of authenticity. No Gulistan Rug has been O.K'd by Karagheusian without it.

PARIS CREATES THE NEW SILHOUETTE

The Normal Waistline, the Even Hemline and Longer Skirts for Daytime Are Prominent Details of the Latest Modes.

Very chic for evening is the cutaway coat of pale blue faille from Lelong, with its extravagant sleeves and opulent band of dark brown fur.

The afternoon coat is often lavishly trimmed with fox fur like this Renee coat of dark brown broadcloth that is laden with red fox.

This is the tailored coat silhouette Paris prefers for street wear. It's fitted in amidships and flared at the hem. The collar and cuffs are made of gray ermine. Model Philippe et Gaston.

The collar of this Philippe et Gaston coat will stand a lot of fixing. Two ways of draping it are shown in the circle at the right, and then it may be let fall around the shoulders as cape, too. The coat is made of black velvet.

Paris Snapshots

¶ Mulberry and plum red, and off-black purple are a trio of new evening colors from Maggy Rouff.

¶ Spangled evening coats that trail in the back, and spangled evening pajamas are a striking novelty of the Redfern collection.

¶ Daytime pumps of antelope to match your fall ensemble in color are being offered in Paris, and handbags of engraved antelope are the latest containers of money, make-up and whatnot.

¶ Lace or chiffon evening frocks trimmed with fur bands are something different for your winter evenings.

¶ Fur ribbons are being brought out by Paris milliners to trim the fall and winter hat of felt or velvet.

The cutaway coat is worn over this evening dress of dark brown faille silk, making one of the newest evening color combinations for fall.

By Bettina Bedwell.

PARIS,—(Special.)—The Paris fashion news reel is unrolling fall styles. They are coming out by the hundreds every day — dresses, coats and suits — and American buyers, despite the discouraging tariff, and the Alpine prices, are gobbling them up and sending them off by every boat. You will see them presently right in your own home town.

The first of the Paris showings prove that, so far as Paris is concerned, longer skirts are here to stay awhile. Nobody is going to give us back our freedom of the knees. On the contrary, there is a noticeable tendency to lengthen daytime skirts to the middle of the calf—about ten to eight inches from the floor for everything except sports clothes. The Big Six—Paris' most radical fashion changers among the dressmakers—have not yet shown their fall clothes, but it seems unlikely that they will tamper with the skirt length, either.

Waistlines are, generally, a little bit lower for daytime, though Paris insists that they shall appear normal. There are thousands of tricks for making the high waistline easier to wear. For instance, though tailored suits—often laden with fur—are one of the big fashion facts for fall, tuck-in blouses that throw the waistline into the limelight are much less in evidence. Tunic blouses that are worn over the top of the skirt, and that reach anywhere from the hips to below the knees, are the newest detail of Paris styles, and as they are draped, or softly girdled around the waistline, they are much easier to get away with.

Coats and jackets are usually somewhat fitted in the regions of the waist and hips, but the in-curve is gentle. It is just enough to do away entirely with the straight-line silhouette that our coats have followed so long. Naturally, the lower part of the fall coat flares a little below the fitted waistline, and many of the fall jackets flare into perky peplums from normal waistline to hips. Lots of coats and jackets are belted.

The biggest change in the fall fashion silhouette is at the shoulders and down the arms. Sleeves are different, and how! This is true of both coats and dresses. Many of the Paris dressmakers widen the shoulders of coats with set-in yokes of fur that extend over the top of the sleeves. Others use modernized leg o'mutton sleeves, and still others revive the old time bishop sleeve that is full to the elbow and fitted below.

This may sound too quaint for our machine-made epoch, but really, girls, it's charming, and you're going to like it. Puffs between shoulder and elbow, dropped shoulder yokes, bishop sleeves with deep fitted cuffs, sleeves with dolman tops, having armholes to the normal waistline and 1930 leg o'mutton fullness, make the arms of the mode appear entirely different from last season. Some of the Paris fashion makers are busy flaring the sleeve from the elbow to the wrist, but in all cases your sleeves must change their shape and forsake the straight and narrow, if they are to be in step with the latest styles. Little puffs and dropped shoulder lines are also being suggested for evening dresses, but this you will hear more of later on.

Embroidery is in again, and it is being used extensively for evening and for the elaborate afternoon tunic blouse and frock. Beads and silk are used to achieve many of the best embroidery designs. Metallic brocades with tiny designs are being used to make heaps of blouses that are to be worn with fur-trimmed suits of broadcloth, chiffon-duvetyne and velvet. Lusterless satin that looks like suede is also good for these blouses and for dresses, too.

Jersey is back for daytime, but it is a new jersey, much richer in effect. There is jersey cloky—looks as if it were embossed with tiny embroidered figures —and there is jersey broadcloth. Both are rich looking and add elegance to the simplest clothes. Fashion is going in for opulence, this fall. Another sign is the unstinted use of fur on coats and dresses, and still another is the deep, rich color scheme that controls the mode for both day and evening.

Ensembles are being broken up, and this is good news for the woman who has to be careful in planning her wardrobe. Matching coats and dresses are still worn, but there's no law about this. Separate coats that can be worn with different dresses in various colors and materials are extremely smart, and some of the great Paris couturiers are combining two and three materials in one suit or ensemble.

Two dress silhouettes stand out of the Paris style shows to date. One is the sheath silhouette that is long and revealing, for evening, but modified for daytime. The other is the silhouette with a fitted-in waistline and a skirt that is full but not flaring from the hips, or a bit below them.

Coats are of every length, both for day and evening, but long coats will stand out as the most distinctive for daylight and lamplight. By long coats, Paris means coats that are long at least in part, because the cutaway coat, dipping to the heels in back is the most fashionable of all coats for evening wear. Like the Lelong evening coat shown today. This coat is made of light blue faille, and as you see, it is cutaway in rounded lines in front. This movement is emphasized by a band of dark brown fox. Please observe the extravagant sleeves. They're very new.

The frock worn with this coat is shown in the smaller sketch, and is made of dark brown faille, which, with the light blue coat, gives us one of the new evening color schemes of Paris. The dress is flared below the hips in wide petals that make the lower skirt, and bands are encrusted in sunburst arrangement around a panel that extends up the front of the skirt to the normal waistline. The long gloves are of dark brown suede—the newest and smartest of colors for evening.

Another sketch shows the kind of coat that Paris recommends for afternoon. It's made of darkest brown chiffon broadcloth, cut to fit slightly in under the arms and flared a bit from hips to hem. Panels are set on at the side, as shown, hiding the closing that curves 'way around over the left hip. This panel is curved at the bottom and edged with fox fur, which also makes the shawl collar and the double bands that flare the lower sleeve of the coat. Model from Renee.

The coat silhouette for street wear is shown in another sketch. This is a wool coat in bright lapis blue, and it is fitted like a redingote. Philippe et Gaston conserve the tailored aspect by adding a flat collar, wide revers and deep cuffs of gray ermine—the newest shade for this fashionable fur.

Paris likes tricky effects in collars for your fall coat, and our last sketch shows one of the best of these. This is a black velvet coat from Philippe et Gaston with a princess silhouette, and flaring cuffs. The collar may be worn as shown, or it may be draped in the two ways illustrated in the circle.

EMERGENCY.

Today I stand in need, I own,
Of one small, temporary loan.

Put up your purse; no cash I seek . . .
My bank account is not too weak.

'Tis courage for today I lack . . .
Tomorrow I can pay you back.

THEATER.

Well the loved vagabond, heart loose, foot loose, dressed in tatters,
Sings to well trained listeners, "Nitchavo," or "Nothing Matters."
But the Careful Person senses, if a spotlight failed to level,
This same actor—fussed and fuming—would be storming, "What the devil!"

STARS OF DESTINY.

One who lives always in wall-papered rooms,
In paneled hallways and in brick lined streets,
Now stands abashed.
She shrinks beneath the star-spaced skies,
Where wide, dark prairies stretch out flat and green
To earth's horizon edge.

Her stars,
Bright arc-lights, neatly spaced,
Keep careful, ordered rows.

Patterns and How to Use Them

By Clotilde

Here Are Some Patterns the Home Dressmaker Will Want to Add to Her Fall Supply.

HERE is a charming new design that besides being smart in every detail, is astonishingly easy to cut and make, and you will surely want to include pattern No. 2818 in the new ones you are buying at this time.

The dress may be made without sleeves, particularly if you are making it for dining or dancing. If for general afternoon wear you will probably use long sleeves. The chic, youthful cape collar is bound to be becoming, and it is so different from other necklines you will be sure to like it.

This is a dress that may be worn to good advantage by the woman who has a full figure as well as by the woman who is slight. The deep hip-yoke effect makes it quite possible for the stout woman to wear a full, flaring skirt that places the fulness low down. Then, too, the cape collar will help disguise too plump arms.

A narrow belt having loops and long ends nips the dress in at a normal waistline, and a matching bow finishes the neck prettily.

The waist is cut so as to have an inverted plait at each underarm at the waistline, and below this the seam edges are joined with notches matching.

The cape collar may be made of a contrasting color or of the dress material, and picoting will finish the edge attractively. The skirt is cut in two sections, seamed and gathered at the top. When it is ready to be basted to the bottom of the waist, pin the center front and back of the waist and skirt together and match the skirt and waist at the underarm seams. Then, holding the skirt towards you, baste the skirt to the waist in a wrong side seam, arranging the fullness evenly as you go.

The seam edges should be overcast together and the seam stitched on the machine. Then, if you like, you may turn the dress right side out and, holding the left hand underneath, lay the seam edge towards the waist and baste in position from the right side. Stitch on the machine, letting this stitching come one-quarter or three-eighths of an inch from the first stitching.

Printed and plain silk crêpe, voile, and rayon novelties are appropriate.

Pattern 2601 is a smart sports design for the junior miss. Skirt and waist are cut separately, but the skirt at the front and back extends the full length of the dress, creating a becoming line. Circular insets or godets at either side of the skirt provide a soft, flaring movement and suggest princess lines. The smooth fitting hipline adds to the smartness of the design and lends a sophisticated air. A narrow belt nips the dress at the normal waistline and pretty shoulder capes create an impression of flared sleeves.

Full length sleeves are included in the pattern, and any of the silk crêpes as well as cotton broadcloth, linen, and shantung are suitable materials.

It will be difficult to find a better choice for a dress for all day occasions than one made by pattern No. 2818—Woman's and misses' dress. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40, and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 2¾ yards of 39 inch material, with ⅝ yard of 39 inch light material and ¼ yard of 39 inch dark contrasting.

3243—Woman's and misses' dress. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40, and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 39 inch material, with ⅝ yard of 39 inch contrasting.

3243. Navy blue silk crêpe, relieved by a touch of pink silk crêpe, will be smart as well as practical.

The surplice bodice is finished with a shawl collar, closing at the left hip with a fancy buckle, indicating the normal waistline. The bodice is long waisted, in that way giving the hips a smooth, flat appearance. The skirt is cut circular, with low placed fulness that ripples beautifully at the hem.

The dress isn't difficult to make, but care must be taken to see that the bodice fits perfectly. Also remember to measure before cutting, to see that the dress will be the right length.

The long, close fitting sleeves need no trimming. Canton crêpe, printed silk crêpe, wool crêpe, and wool challis are suitable materials.

2601—Girl's dress. Sizes 6, 8, 10, 12, and 14 years. Size 8 requires 2¼ yards of 39 inch material.

Fair Sex Challenged

By Antoinette Donnelly

Critic Claims That Without Artifices the 1930 Girl Is Homelier than the 1930 Young Man; Read Him 'n Argue!

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—May heaven protect us poor wimmin! The opposite sex is after our laurels. The term "fair sex" is in jeopardy.

Believe it or not, a male explodes his injured feelings in these unchivalric terms: "Who had a brainstorm and applied the term 'fair sex' to women alone? Every day on street cars, on the streets, here, there and everywhere, one sees women and girls who would show up positively ugly in a group of a dozen average men. Why the monopoly on 'fair sex'? Seems to me the expression should be equally divided, at least. Perhaps the men would have the edge on it, at that. In fact, there are times when I feel actually sorry that some women were so cheated on looks.

"I wonder, if single, how they ever will get married, and, if married, how they ever did it! Maybe chloroform helped. Perhaps a shotgun was used, or mayhap they were clever enough to see that the lights were low when the boy friend called."

Now, isn't that a dirty crack after all the time we women have put in trying to be "different," pictorially? And thinking, as we have, that we had achieved no small measure of success?

Stands Up for Men.

If that isn't enuff from our enemy, let me give you some more from his virile pen. [Let's hope it's a day laborer speaking, not an interior decorator].

"I do think a few excerpts from this letter appearing in your column might bring home to the dear girls the terrible truth that I, and a great many other men, do not regard them and their sex as 'lovely, fascinating, charming visions.' Not by a long shot!

"What I want to emphasize," continues the outraged one, "is the fact that the average youth of today has a skin, both on face and body, that countless women might well envy and same is not doctored up with coats of paint and powder. It is natural.

"Girls of today take credit for having 'a lovely skin' when the credit should go to the chain drug stores. Were they to wash their faces of cold cream, powder, rouge, eyebrow pencil, lipstick and eye-shadow and stand up alongside the average young man of today in the cold daylight, they, the girls, would certainly suffer in comparison."

There's an idea for a contest in the foregoing. My experience is that men do nurse the prejudice that theirs is the complexion that can stand the mid-day light. And, indeed, they might put up a pretty good argument, though a disconcerting one to us constant cold-cream nymphs. You might try the contest idea out in your home, if you have a few male complexions lying about.

Another Below.

So long as we gals are taking it on the chin from our male opponent, we may as well hear him out to the bitter end. In another paragraph he delivers this uppercut:

"What is more, the average man or youth of today presents a more attractive appearance in his bathing togs than do ever so many of his sisters, regardless of what the latter may fondly imagine about themselves. The texture of the male skin is not only smoother, firmer, of healthier appearance, but men are proportioned better. They are not the dieted bag of bones or the beefy specimen of butcher shop impression, if you know what I mean.

"One more thing! The brazenness of the average girl of today—her deliberate efforts to expose as much of her body as possible, which might, for her sake, better be hidden—is revolting. Girls are far more brazen than boys, and one can tell from their expression that they glory in showing themselves off brazenly and being able to get away with it.

"There is no more disgusting sight in my opinion than to see some big fat jane, overfed as a stockyards porker, wabbling about the beach, with big, fat legs, huge, bulging arms, no waistline, hardly any bathing suit and kidding herself that she is a cute eyeful.

"In the same class of ugliness belongs the skinny, undernourished, pale skinned frail, with pipestem legs and arms and little else to speak of, who also cavorts about, believing she and Cleopatra must be blood relations. Either type should stick to beach pajamas and never get into bathing suits wet."

Then, generalizing on how women get that way about thinking they are the fair sex, our outraged one begs us not to overlook the fact that in order to get by "lovely woman" must have the aid of the dressmaker, the perfumer, the cosmetician, the hairdresser, the milliner, and Lord only knows how much else assistance, whereas man can get by with a blue suit, a shave, and a haircut.

"Who, then," he inquires, "is more naturally attractive? Who deserves the breaks? Why should women with their bangles and jangles, their spangles and bangles, their costume jewelry, etc., etc., etc., be labelled 'fair'? If they were fair in a natural way—yes. But if all tricked out and fixed up—as a Christmas tree is pretty when it's all decked out. It isn't so much to look at just by itself. Woman is a human Christmas tree—and the pine needles have fallen off a lot of them."

And that's that—from "Brutal but Honest!"

After which we girls had better get in a good hour on the complexion for if we are going to be robbed of our divine right (or cosmetics) to be "fair" we'd better die with the war paint on!

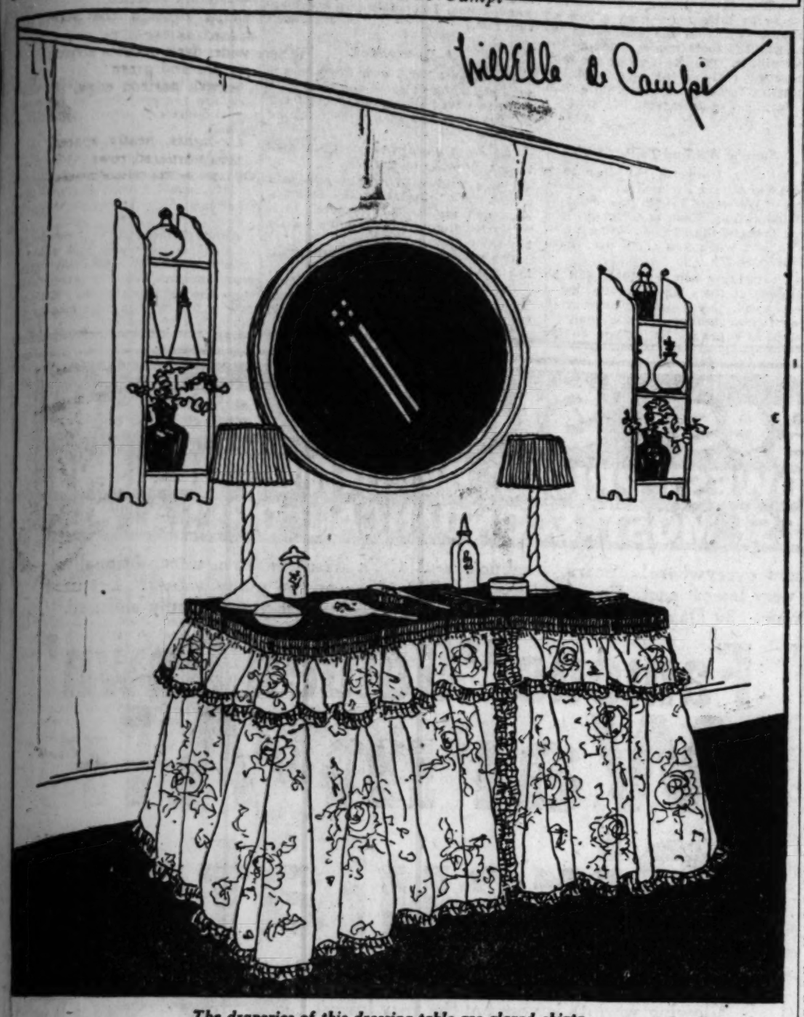
Making a Dressing Table

By WillElla de Campi



The draperies of this dressing table are glazed chintz.

You Can Create This Charming Addition to Your Bedroom at Small Cost and Have It Harmonious with the General Color Scheme.

WillElla de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problem pertaining to home furnishings. Address your letters to WillElla de Campi, The Tribune Chicago. Inclose stamped, addressed envelope for personal reply.

WHETHER it be in an elaborate mansion or in a simple cottage, one of the first essentials to a woman's comfort in her own room is some sort of dressing table. The shops today are filled with all manner of interesting tables in many different periods, so it is not difficult to find one which will be in keeping with the character of the room. Lovely examples may be found, too, in the unfinished furniture departments of many large stores. It is an easy matter to paint or stain these at home so that they will have a made-to-order look, especially well suited to the rooms in which they are to be used.

One of the most popular types, because it appeals so strongly to almost every feminine person, and because it is appropriate in almost any type of room, is the draped dressing table. In homes where furnishings are simple and expenses must be kept as low as possible a plain wooden table, or even a few ordinary boards may be used to make a most attractive table of this kind. A shelf may be put up, at the proper height, by means of wall brackets. The drapery, reaching to the floor, may then be attached to this by small tacks, which later may be covered with flat gimp, or some little decorative edging.

One clever young housekeeper has arranged a draped dressing table like this, with the shelf just wide enough and high enough, so that her sewing machine fits under it. There the machine remains, completely concealed, and out of the way when not in use. A plain kitchen table, or an old dressing table which has become demoded may be transformed by the same method into a most alluring bit of feminine frippery.

It means permit, and something a bit more adequate is desired, there are charming tables especially designed for draping. These are equipped with several drawers and with swinging arms which open outward from the center. Draperies or flounces may be attached to these so that when the dressing table is in use, the arms may be swung back, giving easy access to all the drawers. In any event, the drapery should be open down the front so that the space beneath, whether there are drawers or not, may be more easily reached. Openings and edges may be finished with contrasting bindings, with narrow plaitings or with any of the attractive trimmings which may be bought now ready made.

In selecting the materials for dressing table draperies, the character of the room in which it is to be used must be kept in mind. For informal rooms, the most appropriate fabrics are chintz, either plain or figured, percale, sateen, cotton rep, organdy, dotted Swiss or similar materials. More formal rooms require richer draperies such as taffeta, brocade, moiré, lace, or flowered chiffon. About 50 per cent fullness should be allowed so that the "petticoat" will not seem skimpy. When thin materials like organdy or chiffon are used, it is necessary to use an underslip of heavier stuff. In many instances, the dressing table draperies match those at the windows.

After the dressing table and draperies have been selected, the many accessories and incidental touches must be considered. It is wise, first of all, to have plate glass cut to fit the top, so that cosmetics, perfumes, hot irons, or cigarets will not mar the surface. It is so easy, too, to wipe off the top of a glass covered table, keeping it neat and fresh always. One of the latest innovations which gives a most unusual and fascinating effect is to have a mirror top cut to fit the table. A dressing glass, then, in a decorative frame, may be hung on the wall above the table. Or, if the dressing table is placed in front of the windows, there could be a swinging mirror in a wooden frame in the English style, or a standing, triple mirror, with swinging sides. There are many odd little standing mirrors which may be bought independent of any table.

Perfume bottles, trays, boxes, jars, and all sorts of small objects offer limitless possibilities for making the dressing table colorful and unusual. Lamps and shades, too, aside from being necessary adjuncts, may add a distinctive note of individuality. Another item which gives a sense of nicety to the dressing table is to have the insides of the drawers painted in some contrasting color, or lined with gold, silver, or daintily figured paper.

Today's illustration shows a delightfully effective little dressing table which has been made at a surprisingly low cost. The drapery is of flowered glazed chintz [which easily sheds dust and powder] with a design in shades of rose and green, with touches of blue on a light yellow ground. Edges are finished with a narrow plaiting in rose and green, which was bought by the yard ready made. This plaiting, pasted down flat, finishes the table edge, too.

A simple round mirror on the wall above the table is flanked by narrow hanging shelves holding a few decorative bottles and a pair of little quick silver glass flower vases which reflect all the colors of the room in their gleaming surface. Lamps are of the candlestick variety in green glass, with accordion plaited shades of rose colored book linen. These are bound with green and yellow edging.

Smart bottles, boxes and a toilet set in green, decorated with floral motifs, complete the furnishings.

"Forget the Hair and Treat the Scalp"

The above was the heading for an article written by one of the most famous beauty authorities; no truer statement ever appeared in print, and it substantiates all we have claimed in our advertising. We have always stated—"Cleanse the scalp of dandruff so the pores can breathe, then the hair will take care of itself." Dandruff is the killer of hair beauty. Get rid of it. Here's a simple, safe way—get a little liquid Calonite from your druggist, use it like your regular shampoo, notice just after one application how clean your scalp is. Try this for a few days, then once a week will keep your scalp free and clean and your hair will take care of itself.

Informal Afternoon Tea

By Helen Bartlett

This Hospitable, Gracious Gesture of Serving Tea Is Rapidly Gaining a Foothold with American Women.

Miss Bartlett's two booklets, "Table Setting and Service for Luncheon" and "Table Setting and Service for Dinner" may be obtained by sending two stamped, adressed envelopes to this department. Address Helen Bartlett, Sunday Department, Chicago Tribune.

"JUST TEA" is a grand institution rapidly gaining a foothold in American households. It's a simple rest for the weary of an afternoon, an intimate half hour of ease and conversation, and there is nothing like its casual, comfortable service and cordial hospitality to make any house a popular place, or any household mistress a beloved hostess.

This "tea" shouldn't be confused with "a tea." The latter is something of an affair—calling invariably for afternoon frocks and white kid gloves and polite conversation; the former is the least fussy and perhaps most pleasant form of social intercourse.

The woman who wants to make friends, to keep in touch with the friends she has, or who wants to skilfully improve her place in the social world can find no better vehicle than good fresh tea and small sandwiches served at her house certain afternoons, or every afternoon, to those of her circle who care to drop in.

Usual Hour for Tea.

Five o'clock is the usual hour. The hostess wears any simple frock such as she usually wears in the afternoon in the house; the guests wear the clothes they've been trotting about in all day. Young people might come in for a cup of tea after an afternoon of sports; older women might come from a musical or a matinée, but in any event dress isn't important. At tea people are "as is."

This sort of hospitality is as easy for the hostess as it is delightful for the guests. If she has a maid, it's much easier, of course, but she can manage tea gracefully without the aid of a servant if she's at all skilfull.

All she needs to do it perfectly is a tea table; lacking one, she can still get along successfully with ingenuity, a few minutes' work beforehand, a tray and a table.

Refreshments are the simplest imaginable. Only the woman who wants display at any and all times will have elaborate or rich foods at afternoon tea. Aside from the fact that most of us watch our figure too closely to permit consumption of rich things between meals, it's too close to the dinner hour. Salads are never served.

Manner of Serving.

Sandwiches need be nothing more than plain bread and butter, bread and jelly or lettuce and mayonnaise—small and thin and not too many. These can be prepared beforehand. It is unnecessary to have sweets but if they are served they are nothing more than plain wafers—never fancy pastries.

At a quarter of five the hostess can bring in a stack of plates, tiny servittes, the necessary number of spoons and cups and place them, buffet style, on her table. If she has a tea table this is prepared in the same fashion but is left in the kitchen until her guests come. The plates of sandwiches and wafers are placed on the table, with sugar, cream and a plate of lemon slices.

If the house is servantless the hostess excuses herself shortly after her guests arrive, goes to the kitchen and prepares her tea carefully. She brings it in instantly, asks her guests to help themselves to sandwiches and wafers and serves them their tea, asking their preference as to sugar, lemon and cream.

Toast May Be Served.

If it can be managed comfortably and with the minimum of mechanical difficulty, toast is a pleasant accompaniment to afternoon tea—particularly on cool or cold days.

Where there is a servant, she brings in the tea table containing everything—plates, silver, etc., and the tea. Some hostesses prepare the tea themselves if they have the facilities—a little kettle over an alcohol lamp—and this is a pleasant, hospitable gesture.

And that's all there is to it, but it is as cosy and restful as anything could be. If there's anything more refreshing than a cup of good tea at the end of an afternoon it's the combination of tea and good conversation. By which we mean to say that a hostess' skill doesn't end with the provision of tea—to be truly clever she provides intangible pleasure just as surely. She chooses her guests, be they few or many, with discrimination and she provides the general conversation and atmosphere with the utmost care—the sort of care that is disguised as gentle carelessness.

ANSWERS TO ETIQUETTE QUESTIONS.

"At a bridge luncheon, when two forks and two spoons comprise the necessary silver, where should they be placed? MRS. A. H. K."

The forks are placed to the right of the plate when no knife is used. The spoons may be placed to the right of the forks, but it is better to bring them in with the dessert and the coffee than to have them in place all through the meal.

"When the bride wears a veil is it ever permissible for the groom to wear business clothes? L. L."

Absolutely not. There is nothing more incongruous than a bride in elaborate wedding finery walking down the aisle with a man in business clothes. Either the bride should forsake the finery or have the groom wear the formal dress demanded by the time of day at which the wedding takes place.

"In a wedding procession in a church do the women walk to the right or left of the gentlemen? What is proper in the recessional? I. H."

Neither. Men and women do not walk together in either recessional or processional. The bridesmaids walk in two by two, preceded by the ushers, also two by two. The only woman in the party who is escorted is the bride, who is on her father's right arm going to the altar and on her husband's right arm coming out of the church after the ceremony. If you send a stamped, addressed envelope I will send you my little leaflet on wedding procedure, which contains diagrams of the processional and recessional and correct positions at the altar.

"Is it permissible for a relative of the groom to ask the prospective bride, a self-supporting girl with whom expense is necessarily a big item, if she might bear the burden of the expense of the wedding breakfast, in fact, give the breakfast?

"MRS. M. H."

Quite permissible and a gracious thing to do. The groom's relative should talk it over with the bride-to-be cordially and tactfully, and the girl should not be offended at the offer.

"Is bouillon eaten with a spoon or do we drink it from the cup? "M. B."

When it is served in a two handled cup it is taken from the cup, but when the cup has but one or no handle a spoon is used.

"When the newspaper notice of a death has the words 'Please omit flowers,' should all friends and relations refrain from sending flowers? "T. G."

Not necessarily, but only those close friends who feel that their intimacy with the family justifies it should send flowers. Mere acquaintances would not.

A Friend in Need

By Sally Joy Brown

Here's An Opportunity to Help Invalids Who Cannot Afford Any of the Aids That Lighten the Burden of Suffering.

I want to be the medium through which the friends in need and the friends in deed may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

SEPTEMBER days and the cool, fresh, vigorous weather that accompanies them act like a tonic to which we respond most readily. A zest of living is reborn in us and our trek through life becomes, at least for the present, a more animated and lively operation than it's been since the warm weather began. We realize of a sudden that our existence is a pretty satisfactory one and minor worries soon vanish in such an outlook.

Not to dim this happy frame of mind, but perhaps to add to the pleasing things about you—for performing charity is one of the most gratifying things you can do—we are making a plea for the people about us who have not been blessed with your strong, vigorous bodies and your good health.

Do you know what it means to be penned within four walls day after day, never seeing the green of parks and trees and never experiencing the warm feeling of the sun's rays because your legs aren't able to perform their appointed duty? Can you realize what it is to be perfectly helpless and dependent? And do you know the pain that exists sometimes because the poor invalid isn't able to provide himself with the proper care and equipment?

Illness and disability means suffering, even if one is able to supply everything that is known in the way of sick room comforts. Think how much greater this suffering is when the invalid can afford none of these Wheel chairs, crutches, abdominal supports, bed rests—things that probably have been used in your own home but, happily, are now no longer needed, would relieve so much wretchedness and the radio sets, books, games, pieces for making quilts, or the singing canary you no longer want would bring much happiness into other lives.

Won't you give these to the needy people who have come to my attention? I shall be glad to put you in touch with them.

Asks for Books.

"I am an elderly woman, alone, partially disabled by rheumatism, and support myself by doing needlework. If any of your readers has history, travel, fiction or other books to give I would appreciate having them. It would relieve my loneliness after working hours. E. S."

The books you've finished and do not wish to keep in your library would provide many happy hours for this lonely woman. Won't you keep her in mind when disposing of them?

Invalid Needs Reclining Chair.

"I have a brother who is bedridden with dropsy. The doctor says he should be able to sit up if we could get a Morris chair or some other comfortable chair with a back that can be lowered. Do you think you could get one of these through your column? A. L."

This type of chair is seldom seen in this day, but it is quite likely there is one stored away which this invalid could use. I know he would find it a great comfort and joy.

Has Special Hobby.

"On account of illness, I am unable to go out to earn my living. I have had experience in raising tropical fish and if there is anyone who has such fish and an aquarium to give away, I think I would be able to do something along this line. I should also like to have a copy of Inis' book, 'Tropical Fish,' and some sort, of an oil or electric heater to supply the extra heat in the room.

"MRS. M. L."

When one is handicapped in one direction we think it is admirable to make the most of one's talents in another, as this woman is endeavoring to do. If you can give, any of the articles she needs to make this venture a successful one, I know it will be appreciated.

Letter from Veteran.

"I have been wondering if one of your friends has lettering brushes or art materials of any kind he no longer wants. I am confined in a veterans' bureau hospital and hope to be able to make my living when I am discharged. I could work with these while I am here. M. L."

The commercial artist who is well supplied with the tools of his profession may have some of this equipment to spare for the ambitious service man who is making every effort to adjust his talents to his condition. With your assistance he will soon be equipped to earn a living.

Would Repair Radios.

"Will you please help me get an electric soldering iron and any tools for tinkering with a radio? I am learning to repair radios and find it interesting. I am a patient in the tuberculosis ward of this hospital.

"F. C."

When his health permits, this man hopes to be able to make a livelihood with the knowledge he is acquiring in the industrial school of this hospital. Will you help him by donating the tools he needs?

City Chap Rates High

—By Doris Blake—

He Has High Health and Moral Standards and Makes Ideal Husband for the American Girl.

"AS a prospective husband to any charming member of the posite sex, HE is from a health standpoint an ideal risk.

"As a lover HE rates A No. 1.

"He is more religious than most folk suspect.

"HE is more serious minded than HE is given credit for."

Who is this answer to every right minded maiden's prayer? And where is HE to be found?

Believe E. A. Hungerford, secretary of the Young Men's Christian association, that the HE of the foregoing attributes for husband making may be found in the biggest and busiest center of the world, right in New York City. The hinterlands do not have to be fine combed for the paragon, nor is he an occasional big town exhibit. He abounds in large numbers and he and the girl lucky enough to pick him off have as good chances for happiness living in the metropolitan environs as in a town, small, middle sized, or in the wide open spaces beyond town or city limits.

"Young men in New York City," says our authority whose business and daily contact is with the sex and generation toward which our young women must look with hopeful eyes, "live in an environment in which happiness can be attained more readily than in any other urban center in the United States."

Mr. Hungerford's statement is backed by a study recently made by representatives of the New York City Y. M. C. A., from which it is concluded also that "the young men of the metropolis are found in general to be as fine specimens of the human race as are now at large anywhere."

Health Rates High.

For one thing, as the report points out, the young man of New York is as healthy a male as recent civilization has witnessed, living in as healthy a city as there is in America. And health, as is pointed out, has a dominant influence on happiness. Available to young Mr. Manhattan are the best athletic clubs in the world, the best physical departments, public golf courses, tennis courts, swimming pools and beaches, interesting hiking trips, opportunities to participate in recreational games and athletic sports. Here are the best doctors to advise him on health matters. Radio stations broadcast daily health exercises for his benefit.

All of which may not be so important to the eager feminine mind and heart, though the health factor might well be, as the young gentleman's serious-mindedness toward his job and his rating as a perfect suitor.

"He works at his job as if he expected to be partner in the firm, which happens many times," we learn from the report.

"He is morally clean. . . . To accommodate his girl friends he will sometimes pet—frequently because he feels that cooperation in this diversion is expected of him." [Ed. note: The report compilers are not without their grain of humor, could it not be said, girls?]

Good Education, Morals.

This HE of observation and eulogy, one is told further by those who have had him under the microscope, possesses poise and self-control and has sown fewer wild oats than have the youth of any other era.

Whether he expresses his affections on top of a bus, at the movies, in the park, or in the greater privacy of his or his girl's apartment, he is generally found to be honorable. Yet in no city does an individual have more personal freedom than in New York or more opportunity to raise the devil unknown to his friends.

The young man of the metropolis is better educated than has been true of any previous generation, we learn further. In New York City he finds endless educational opportunities. Educational institutions, especially those providing evening courses, are hard put to it to provide enough teachers and classrooms to meet his needs. And such is the sort of night club life this ideal young man prefers.

Socially he has no difficulty in playing the game at par or little better, the report further unfolds. No more satisfactory dancer may be found. Girls generally admit his skill in this diversion.

He can play a good bridge hand. If not a good conversationalist he can be a good listener. As a week-end guest he is usually an exceptional success.

An Adequate Salary.

As to wealth he has more of it than has been the possession of the youth of any nation in the history of the world. In New York City, where everything is more expensive than in most other places, a large number of men are earning $200 a month or $2,400 a year, a sum guaranteed by the investigators to be ample for marriage and the establishment of a home. Compared to the economic order of other nations, two hundred a month is deemed a real sum of money. The proof that fifty a week is ample for venturing on a marriage career, Mr. Hungerford points out, is found in the fact that two-thirds of the families in New York City in 1928 were living on less.

For opportunity to win notable success the metropolis is given distinction as the place for a young man of determination and ability.

This male blessing is not a confirmed bachelor. Why should he be? his examiners ask. In New York he finds an endless number of delightful feminine personalities. No more charming girls are alive. They, too, are healthy, intelligent and capable of being on their own. They are interested in marriage, also, a home and a desirable man.

Should Be Happy.

The exceptional cultural advantages in which young Mr. Manhattan lives, the range of constructive entertainment available, the health and success advantages of his environment prescribe the conclusions that "the young man in New York who does not achieve a substantial goal of genuine happiness has himself to blame. Only unwise choices can keep him from achieving that satisfaction in life which is the right of all human beings."

In spite of the foregoing findings, we would not advise young women in other communities to withdraw their savings for a try at New York and its young men, for as advantages are now throughout the land, it is a rare community, indeed, that cannot produce equally happy answers to our said young women's prayers.

The report, however, does give the metropolitan dweller a fairer break than he is accustomed to getting in generalizations on modern youth.

BIGGEST LIAR

Who was the biggest liar you ever knew, and what yarn did he tell? If you want to see him in print address Biggest Liar editor, Chicago Sunday Tribune.

Stop! Stop!

A fisherman friend once told me of catching four bass, ranging from one to four pounds, with one worm. He cut a hole in the ice, held the worm with one hand above this hole, and as the hungry bass leaped up after the worm he caught them, one by one, by the gills with his free hand. He still had the worm for the next day's catch! M. T.

An Artistic Diplomat.

The biggest liar I've ever known was the owner of a summer resort in another state. His advertisement promised everything under the sun, including fine meals.

The lake which he had painted in glowing terms was a weedy puddle in which fish were an unknown quantity. The fresh cream came from cans, as did most of the other so-called garden grown foods. Outdoor sports turned out to be little more than a row of rocking chairs on the unscreened veranda. The sport was supplied by the mosquitoes. That was about the only muscular activity the place afforded, swatting "skeets." He was more than a liar; he was an artistic diplomat. A. L.

Sought William Tell's Skull.

One day I opened the door to a crowd of my son's schoolmates, clamoring, "We came to see the skull of William Tell! Your boy, Robert, said you brought the skull of William Tell with you when you came over from Switzerland."

I called my son, aged 10, and he laughed at them, saying, "Ha! ha! I fooled you. I got tired of hearing all you fellows bragging about your old relics, so I thought I'd tell you we had a relic you couldn't beat, and make you keep still."

When they were gone, he chuckled, and though I ought to have reprimanded him, I couldn't help laughing with him. J. H. A.

A Family Man.

The biggest liar I ever knew was a very charming cultured gentleman.

He told me he was single and I fell in love with the man I thought he was.

One night shortly before Christmas he asked me to marry him.

I was wild with delight and said a glad "yes." Just then the door bell rang and my landlady ushered in a weary looking woman dragging a little boy after her.

The woman was his wife and with her was their son.

He dropped to zero in my estimation. I still think he is the greatest liar I ever met. This is a true story. H. B.

Houses, Like People, Enjoy New Autumn Garb, and a New Table Chair or Couch Can Do a Lot to Add a Brightening Note.

SUMMER may be over, but the memory lingers on—for the fever victims. However, the ...ndar can't be wrong and it say... we're almost half way through ... ember. Off come the slip covers, ... house takes on the sturdy, comfortable aspects of its fall and winter garb. Summer draperies are put away and the heavier ones of darker colors appear, colors that reflect the rich, deep shades of autmun dahlias, zinnias and asters. With the longer evenings indoors our attention is once more centered on the inside of the house and its furnishings.

Now is the time to add a piece of furniture here and there. It is surprising what a brightening effect a new table or chair or couch can create in a room. Simply rearranging the grouping of the pieces you now have changes the atmosphere and has a rejuvenating effect. And the addition of a new lamp or two does the same thing.

I have chosen today some single pieces of furniture that, because of their simple lines, will fit into almost any decorative scheme. They represent a wide range in prices. The beautiful Duncan Phyffe sofa table is a mahogany reproduction made largely by hand by skilled Scotch and English craftsmen, some of whom came from Duncan Phyffe's native town in Scotland. Only the finest woods are employed. For delicacy and grace this table is hard to equal. Closed it is 43 inches long and 21 inches wide. With the two end leaves extended it measures 69 inches long.

Here it is seen against the wall, but it is charming back to back with a couch where the lamp makes an ideal reading light. A low pottery lamp with one of the new shades imitating linen would be effective.

The mahogany chest of drawers seen in another picture is a Sheraton reproduction and, like all the Sheraton designs, combines classic elegance with practicability. The famous Englishman, whose "The Cabinet Maker and Upholsterer's Drawing Book," published in 1791, inspired much of the late 18th and early 19th century furniture in both England and this country, loved French styles, particularly those of the neoclassic or Louis XVI. period, and utilized satinwood and some mahogany in their construction.

This chest is a good example of his simpler pieces. The wood itself is its own decoration. A beautiful burl forms a wavy ornamentation in the center of the fronts of the drawers. Just below the top a long slide may be pulled out by tiny handles. With a long mirror hung above it this chest would be most attractive in a bedroom or in an entrance hall.

The picture showing the chair and table illustrates furniture at a lower price. I have seen any number of pretty individual chairs like this at Chicago furniture and department stores at such ridiculously low cost that any one can afford to have several in his home. This octagonal walnut table is also most reasonably priced and makes a convenient reading table with the simple bronze lamp with two-tone silk shade. Notice the little banjo wall clock which adds a touch of personality to the group.

Needle Wanted.

A westbound train carrying me t... California was crossing that part o... Texas where stops are few and hours apart. It was shortly after the en... trance of the United States into the world war, when the intricacies of knitting were known only to our grandmothers.

The elderly passenger, who was s... patriotically occupying the long hours of the trip, found herself at the point of the sock where a darning needle is necessary to turn the toe. A thorough search of her own baggage and inquiry up and down the aisle failed to reveal a needle large enough to carry the yarn. The whole train became interested, but it looked as though the sock could not be finished. Station after station was combed for the needed article.

One stop so barren that no one paid the compliment of alighting, boasted a lone water tank, beside which was a shack which housed a pumping plant. From my window I watched the only visible inhabitant who leaned against a telephone pole smoking a blackened pipe. The porter accosted him from the lowest step of the car. "Boss, you wouldn't happen to have a darning needle about yo?" The sole inhabitant remained motionless. Only his eyes traveled lazily up the telephone pole to a shining object. "One stickin' in 'ers pole," he commented. N. R.

Diamond Heel.

Last week at a large gathering in our church parlors my husband and I stood chatting with a friend. He remarked that something was stuck in his rubber heel and tried to scrape it loose. It stuck and he said nothing more about it. We did not see him again until almost time to go home. Then he dropped into a seat beside me and said, "I wonder what I could have stepped on. It's been botheri... all evening." He dug the object out with his knife and to our astonishment it was a rather large di... mond. I glanced at my engagement ring and the stone was indeed gone. This Pretty Hat of Black Chiffon Velvet May Be Made by the Amateur Milliner at Home.

THE smart hat illustrated today is made of black chiffon velvet. This hat is of the off the face, gobilke type that will be seen so much this season. The hair line on the forehead is completely covered, while on both sides the fair lady's locks peep out. A bow or knot of patent leather in any color is set high over the left eye and is the only trimming needed.

This hat has a circle of the velvet in the back. A bias side crown is sewed on to this circle, and belting ribbon one inch wide is fitted to the head and joined. This makes the head size band.

After the bias side crown is fitted on to the circle turn in the lower edge of the side crown and put this on the ribbon head size band. Let the edge of the ribbon come to the turned-in edge of the velvet. Be careful not to have any fullness in the front line of the hat. Put all the extra fullness to the back. If there is too much fullness open up the seam of the bias side crown and take a deeper seam.

To get the depth of the hat, put it on the wearer's head and adjust the plaits. If too deep, put in two small plaits or one deep one. Chiffon velvet comes wide, but three-fourths of a yard is the least to buy. Any less will not give the true bias so necessary in millinery. If directions are followed and goods cut by the measurements given, it will be a pleasure to make this hat.

The measurements given are for a debutante head size, 21½ inches. When making for a large head size make the circle a little larger and the side crown deeper. Instead of 9 inches on the selvage edge make it 13 inches. Any colored velvet works up well in these little hats.

After having finished the hat it will be a satisfaction to know you will be wearing the right thing with your fall costume. Be sure your ends of the bias side crown are cut as in the pattern. Fit the circle around the side crown and allow enough for a seam. Cut off if too long and join on the sewing machine, making a circle before sewing on the top crown.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

DO you know that just beneath that soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon? Nature causes the normal skin to peel off in tiny, unseen, flour-like particles, a little each day, renewing the complexion of youth naturally, but there comes a time when this skin shedding slows up. Worry, overwork, sickness, inactivity are reasons that cause the face to be blotchy, discolored, pimply and old looking. The thing to do, if you wish to look your prettiest at all times, is to assist nature in the process of absorption by using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce at any drug store or beauty counter and use as directed. It gently but surely peels away the outer scarf skin, removing freckles, pimples, blackheads or a muddy complexion. The underneath skin, now in evidence, is clear, pink, fresh and velvety, and the entire face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty. To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines we recommend a face lotion of unusual merit. Ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel.

Furniture for Fall

By Edith Weigle

Chairs, Like People, Enjoy New Autumn Garb, and a New Table, Chair or Couch Can Do a Lot to Add a Brightening Note.

SUMMER may be over, but the summery lingers on—for the hay fever victims. However, the calendar can't be wrong and it says we're almost half way through September. Off come the slip covers, the chintz bibs on the sturdy, comfortable upholstery of its fall and winter dress. Summery draperies are put away for the heavier ones of darker colors and richer colors that reflect the rich, warm shades of autmun dahlias, zinnias and asters. With the longer evenings our attention is once more centered on the inside of the house and its furnishings.

Now is the time to add a piece of furniture here and there. It is surprising what a brightening effect a new table or chair or couch can create in a room. Simply rearranging the furnishings of the pieces you now have changes the atmosphere and has a refreshing effect. And the addition of a new lamp or two does the same thing.

I have chosen today some single pieces of furniture that, because of their simple lines, will fit into almost any decorative scheme. They represent a wide range in prices. The beautiful Duncan Phyffe sofa table is a masterly reproduction made largely by skilled Scotch and English workmen, some of whom came from Duncan Phyffe's native town in Scotland. Only the finest woods are employed. For delicacy and grace this piece is hard to equal. Closed it is 30 inches long and 21 inches wide. With the two end leaves extended it measures 49 inches long.

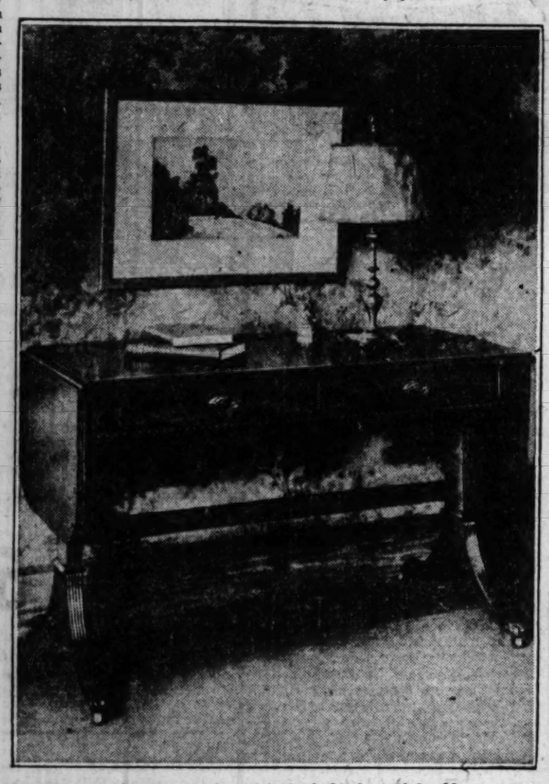
When it is seen against the wall, but it is a charming back to back with a chair where the lamp makes an ideal reading light. A low pottery lamp with one of the new shades imitating parchment would be effective.

The mahogany chest of drawers shown in another picture is a Sheraton adaptation and, like all the Sheraton pieces, combines classic elegance with practicality. The famous English-cabinetmaker, whose "The Cabinet Maker and Upholsterer's Drawing Book," published in 1791, inspired much of the furniture in both England and this country, especially French styles, particularly those of the neoclassic or Louis XVI. period, often utilized satinwood and some mahogany in their construction.

This chest is a good example of his finest pieces. The wood itself is its chief decoration. A beautiful burl gives a wavy ornamentation in the center of the fronts of the drawers. Just below the top a long slide may be pulled out by tiny handles. With a mirror hung above it this chest would be most attractive in a bedroom or in an entrance hall.

The picture showing the chair and table illustrates furniture at a lower price. I have seen any number of very individual chairs like this at unique furniture and department stores at such ridiculously low cost that any one can afford to have several in the home. This octagonal walnut table is also most reasonably priced and makes a convenient reading table, with the simple bronze lamp with two-tone silk shade. Notice the little banjo clock which adds a touch of personality to the group.

This informal group is inexpensively priced.



Duncan Phyffe made the original of this beautiful table.

Needle Wanted.

A southbound train carrying me to Florida was crossing that part of Georgia where stops are few and hours long. It was shortly after the entrance of the United States into the world war, when the intricacies of knitting were known only to our grandmothers.

The elderly passenger, who was so unfortunately occupying the long hours of his trip, found herself at the point of a sock where a darning needle is necessary to turn the toe. A thorough search of her own baggage and a query up and down the aisle failed to reveal a needle large enough to carry the yarn. The whole train became interested, but it looked as though the sock could not be finished. Station after station was combed for the needed article.

The stop so barren that no one paid the compliment of alighting, boasted only a water tank, beside which was a shack which housed a pumping plant. From my window I watched the only human inhabitant who leaned against a telephone pole smoking a blackened pipe. The porter accosted him from the lowest step of the car. "Boss, you don't happen to have a darning needle on you?" The sole inhabitant stood motionless. Only his eyes moved lazily up the telephone pole to a shining object. "One stickin' in dat pole," he commented. N. R.

Diamond Heel.

Last week at a large gathering in the church parlors my husband and I were chatting with a friend. He noticed that something was stuck in the rubber heel and tried to scrape it out. It stuck and he said nothing about it. We did not see him for what almost time to go home when he dropped into a seat beside me and said, "I wonder what I could have stepped on. It's been bothering me all evening." He dug the object out with his knife and to our astonishment it was a rather large diamond. I glanced at my engagement ring and the stone was indeed gone. The stone had found proved to be genuine and we thought it a very lucky find. G. W. C.

Music in Air.

Recently I went to my garden at 6 o'clock in the morning and as I was admiring the beauty of a Red Radiance rose all silvery with dew, there came to my ears, from a nearby garden, the beautiful song:

I come to the garden alone,
While the dew is still on the roses,
And the voice I hear
Falling on my ear,
The son of God discloses."

When I came into the house I thought I would get the song book and read the words of the entire song. I found the book open on the piano at that very song, it having been the last selection my husband had played several evenings previous. E. W.

Tribute.

Recently I attended an intramural tennis match. It was hot and uncomfortable standing, so during an interval I went over to a tree and sat down. I always carry a library book, so was soon interested in it, and though I was conscious of other people in the vicinity, trying to cool off, I paid no attention. Finally, I looked up to find a man beside me, apparently reading over my shoulder. He said;

"What do you think of the author?"

"I think he's great," I said enthusiastically.

"Thanks," said he, and started to walk off, but I ran after him and held out my hand. It was the high mogul himself. F. H. K.

"Exclusive" Models.

One fall, years and years ago, my mother had purchased for herself and me a fine array of apparel, dresses, hats, coats, etc.

Well satisfied with the appearance we made in these, she decided, while our things were new, we would spend one day with my aunt, who lived in a small town not far away. We went by train. As we reached our destination and stepped to the platform, I glanced across to the train on nearby track ready to move out over the route we had traversed. I gasped, stupidly: "Look, mother, there you are again, getting back on that train!"

"That is Aunt Amy, going to our house. We must go back with her," mother said, hustling me aboard, barely in time, and there sat Aunt Amy, she and mother as like as two peas, their dresses being identical in color and material, and hats and coats almost the same.

I hated to go back home, but they had a good day admiring each other and their clothes. H. R. M.

The Benefactor

By G. R. MALLOCH

After Mr. Taladore Had Made His Will Leaving His Entire Fortune to the East End Hospital He Spent His Days Fearing Chance Might Bring Him Under the Hands of the Doctors.

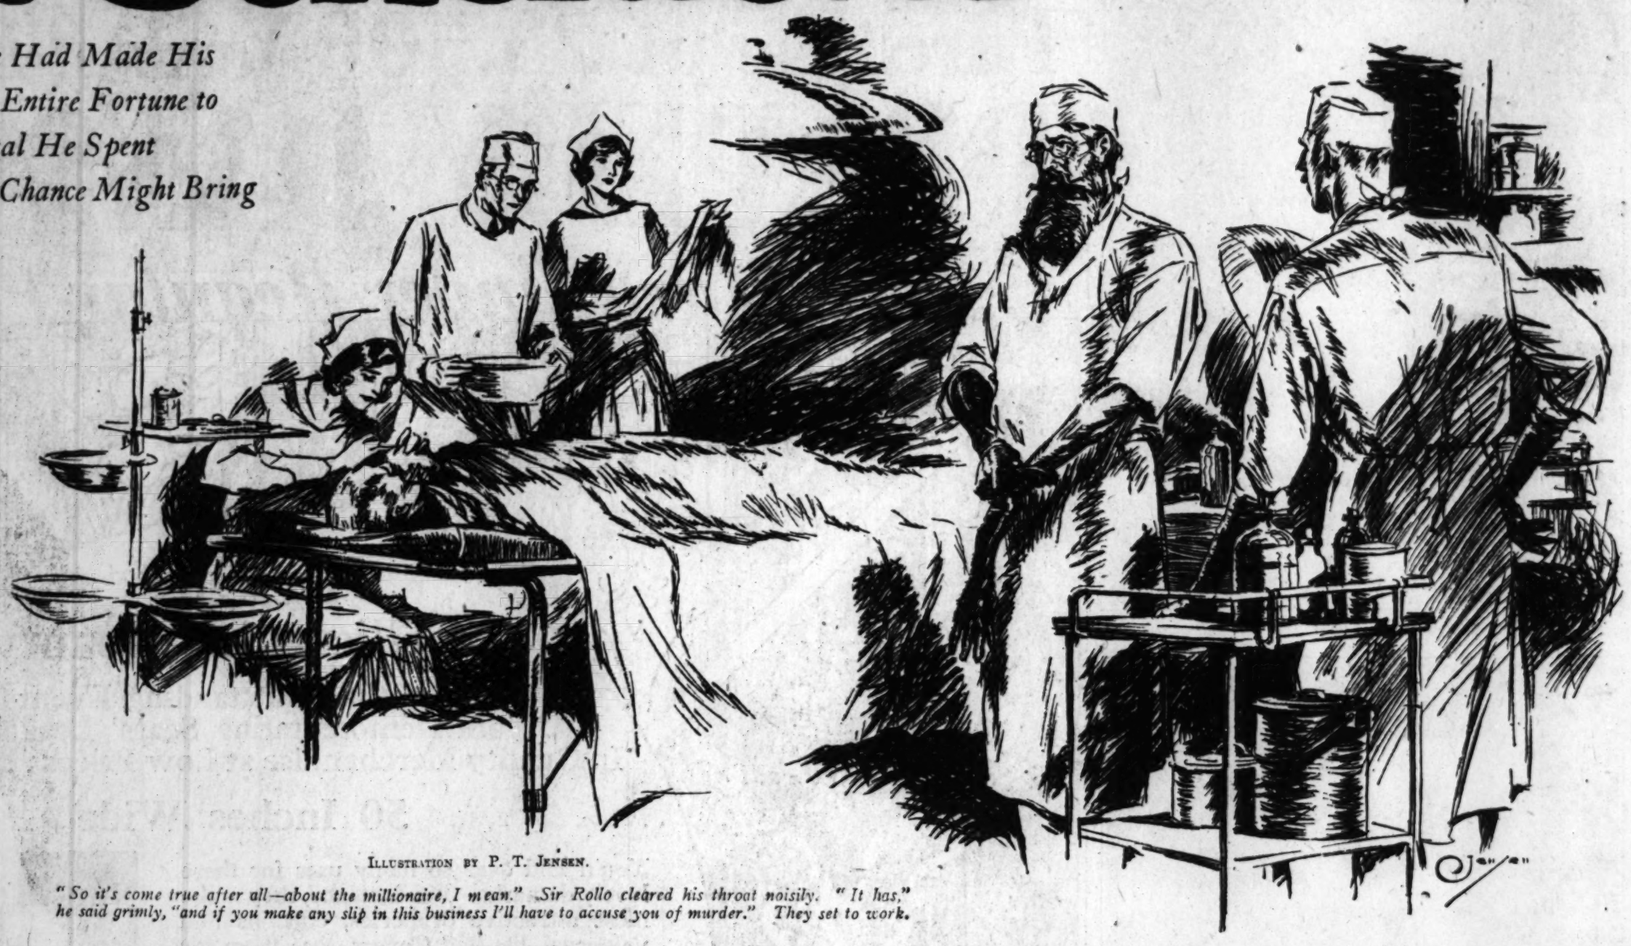

ILLUSTRATION BY P. T. JENSEN.

"So it's come true after all—about the millionaire, I mean." Sir Rollo cleared his throat noisily. "It has," he said grimly, "and if you make any slip in this business I'll have to accuse you of murder." They set to work.

PERHAPS the best known of Mr. Taladore's many benefactions was his magnificent endowment of an east end hospital.

Mr. Taladore was a millionaire, which is another way of saying that he commanded every means of material enjoyment known to mankind. His was the choice of all kinds of purchasable pleasure; he could know the satisfaction of owning large and beautiful houses and magnificent estates; if he cared for sport, he could slaughter birds and hunt foxes in the best manner at home or conduct expensive expeditions to the ends of the earth in search of larger or more uncommon prey, while the most complicated and most deadly weapons of destruction were his for the ordering.

Did his taste incline to the arts, he could amass collections of pictures or statuary or other objects of artistic interest, acquire a marvelous library by merely signing a check, buy theaters and produce plays, or endow operatic institutions. He could travel where he pleased in the most luxurious fashion or fly through the air in the latest type of plane piloted by the most expert of pilots; he could own newspapers and write in them, if he chose. By merely dispensing a little of his surplus he could endow struggling genius, found schools, aid scientific research, bring relief and happiness to the widow and the orphan, the sick and the suffering. In fact he could do any of the things that money enables a man to do.

The fact that Mr. Taladore did none or few of the things we have enumerated may have had something to do with the fact that he was not happy. He remained an expanding money box, taking in more and more money every day and never releasing any of it willingly for any other purpose than the making of more money. You can get like that if you are a millionaire and it is a thing to avoid.

People bowed down before Mr. Taladore, bankers rubbed their hands at his approach, head waiters as nearly as possible went on all fours when he entered restaurants, underlings of all kinds dashed to serve him wherever he went, merely because he was known to be a millionaire. And all for nothing, too, or nearly nothing; it was a rule of Mr. Taladore's never to give anything away if he could avoid it and to pay at minimum rates for services received. But nobody grumbled; there must be some magical quality about a millionaire's sixpence which makes it valued more than a poor man's half-crown; perhaps the superstitious shut them up with ordinary sixpences, hoping that they will breed.

Slave of the Million

Waiters who despised the poor man for giving them a tip he could not afford, admired the millionaire for his meanness. "Knows how to take care of his money," they murmured. "That's how he became a millionaire." And with renewed genuflections they bowed him out or in, as the case might be.

If that was not quite how Mr. Taladore came to be a millionaire, it had something to do with his becoming a multimillionaire. He began life as a rather nervous, impressionable boy and might, under more fortunate circumstances, have developed into an ordinary human being. But misfortune overtook him at an early age when he was adopted by a wealthy aunt as her heir.

His aunt had a great deal of money and as time went on money became more and more to her. She lived in state and traveled in state and was always surrounded by servants, with the result that in time she quite lost touch with ordinary folk. She led a dull life in a money colored world. She maintained a remarkably good appetite and died at middle age, largely of overeating, having achieved the record of never having done a stroke of work in her life. She was deeply mourned.

Young Mr Taladore who during the most impressionable years of his youth had imbibed the influences that surrounded his aunt to an extent that detracted largely from his popularity with his contemporaries, was brought down from Cambridge during his second year to attend the funeral of his aunt and to discover that, as he had expected, he had inherited her million. As the deceased lady was the only person with whom he had lived on terms of anything like intimacy, he indulged in a natural grief; but it was tempered by the fact that he had stood in considerable awe of her and by the pleasing reflection that he was now his own master. He did not realize that he was also the slave to the million.

He decided not to return to the university out to devote himself to the multifarious duties connected with the proper care of a fortune. Like his deceased aunt, he was no fool in money matters and the cloud of financial blowflies that inevitably surrounds the callow millionaire was almost immediately dispersed by the disinfectant commonsense which he displayed. He settled down in the stately town mansion which was part of his heritage and applied himself to the task of mastering the complexities of his aunt's investments; and this absorbed so much of his time that he gradually lost touch with all the more adventurous or Bohemian of his Cambridge friends, one after another of whom voted him "stuffy" and abandoned the acquaintance.

Cuts Off His Son

In time, he found it convenient to have an office in the city to which he journeyed daily. He was fascinated by the possibilities of the stock markets in which he perceived that large awards awaited the shrewd investor. And Mr. Taladore was shrewd; he had, also, a healthy instinct for sport which might have been more happily developed had he been a poorer man; as it was he found his sport in hunting bulls and bears on the stock exchange. He prospered, and the city rewarded his prosperity with due respect. The name of Taladore became a talisman; when Taladore bought, experienced men bought, and when he sold they sold; his name on a company prospectus was a guarantee of success and also, let it be said of integrity.

Two great griefs visited him in his private life. The first was the failure of his marriage to the daughter of a poor nobleman. She bore him a son and then left him, with a penniless fox hunter. Mr. Taladore divorced her with a brave face, but he had loved her as far as finance would allow, and the blow was a severe one. He lavished money and care on the education of his boy, and the boy was his second grief. He seemed to have inherited more of the careless disposition of his mother than the characteristics of his father. He lounged through school and was sent down from Cambridge during his second term by outraged authorities; he refused point blank to enter his father's office, derided high finance, and finally set up in Chelsea as a painter.

Mr. Taladore loved his son as he loved nothing else on earth; consequently he did his best to hurt and injure him by cutting him off. And when he told Dick that he was disinherited and that the Taladore millions had been willed to the Eastern hospital, Dick only laughed and said, "Fine!"

"What an escape for me!" he added. "I was afraid of all that beastly money."

"You are a bigger fool than I took you for," said his father, angrily.

"I am," replied the young man, flippantly. "And just to prove it, dad, I may as well tell you that I'm going to marry."

A gleam of hope flickered in Mr. Taladore's eyes for a moment. If the boy married some sensible girl of his own class, she would soon bring him to a saner mood; a picture rose in Mr. Taladore's mind of a repentant Dick with a nice wife—and babies. Grandchildren! There was a lot of starved affection in Mr. Taladore's heart that sometimes clamored for an outlet.

But Dick's reply dispelled these infant hopes.

"She's in the chorus of 'Go to Sleep.' You'd love her, dad."

A Hundred a Year

Mr. Taladore groaned. Of the many prejudices that had been instilled into him by his aunt, a prejudice against the lighter forms of stage entertainment and those who partook in it, had been one of the fiercest. His boy, the heir of the Taladore millions, the inheritor of that sacred trust, to marry a chorus girl! He thought of a great many things to say but repressed the impulse with a sigh. Only time and harsh experience could bring this young fool to his senses.

"If you cherish any hope that I can be induced to finance the social ambitions of a chorus girl, even in such a high class production as 'Go to Sleep,'" he said, with heavy irony, "my advice to you is to wake up. Once and for all, I refuse to give any countenance to such a match. I have set before you clearly just now the conditions upon which I was prepared to overlook your past follies and place you in my office as the heir to my money. I am not going to leave the Taladore fortune to be dissipated by a wastrel.

"If you reject my offer I have resolved to leave everything to the Eastern hospital, an institution which does an immense amount of good among the poor. I can endow it to an extent that will place every resource of modern science at its disposal in combatting disease. Do you think for a moment that I would hesitate between an object like that and the endowment of an extravagant fool?"

"Don't hesitate on my account," said Dick. "You're the slave of your money and I've no wish to succeed to that office. I'm jolly glad you're going to do anything so useful. Seriously, I don't think you should cut me out altogether, but if inheriting your money means that I've got to give up my own life and my own ideas and take on yours, which I dislike, then I'd rather be out of it."

"I shall settle exactly a hundred a year on you," was his father's reply. "That's enough to keep you alive and so far as I can see you're not worth more to the community. As for this mad idea of being a painter, you haven't got the talent for it. But choose for yourself! I'm afraid you take after your mother too much."

"Leave my mother alone!" snapped Dick.

"I wish she had left me alone," was the bitter response. "Apply to my lawyers when you want your money."

"It'll be a damned long time before I do that!" shouted Dick, as he flung out of the room and out of the house. And Mr. Taladore, his heart wrung with grief because he loved his son, drove straight away to his lawyer and signed the will which he had devised in order to do his son the greatest injury he could think of.

Dick Disappears

Dick disappeared into the fastnesses of Chelsea and Mr. Taladore saw no more of him; nor did he learn anything of his marriage although he scanned the "Times" anxiously every day, hoping for the satisfaction of being able to say to himself, "Ah, the young fool's done it, after all!" Dick had passed out of his life; he fell into his old way of living and became more deeply immersed in financial affairs than ever.

Now and then he continued to give rather dull and stuffy dinner parties to his city friends, dinners at which great bankers exchanged sparkling repartee on the bank rate or tossed the conversational ball lightly from the price of sulphur to the lastest trans-Atlantic merger of hardware companies.

It was at one of those dinners that he met the great surgeon, Sir Rollo Leads. A rich banker, for whose opinions Mr. Taladore had the profoundest respect, had asked if he might bring Sir Rollo, who wanted to plead with city men on behalf of a hospital in which he was interested. Mr. Taladore, inwardly slightly contemptuous, assented with becoming cordiality; he gave decorously in the city such subscriptions to charity as were expected of city men; but for fanatical crusaders for impracticable causes, such as he imagined Sir Rollo to be, he had little sympathy.

After all a rich man paid in the shape of taxes enormous sums towards the social services of the state, and if it had not been for the look of the thing, he would not have willingly gone beyond that. Leaving his money to endow a hospital was another matter; it was right to leave what one could not enjoy to charitable objects; it was in the city tradition and it enabled him to strike at the son whom he loved. So it came about that Sir Rollo appeared as a guest at Mr. Taladore's table; and he proved to be a witty and amusing guest with a wide knowledge of the world.

Mr. Taladore sat at the head of his table musing on the strange types that existed outside the world of practical affairs, as he watched Sir Rollo dominating the company. There was something of the fanatic about this fellow, you could see that in the thin lipped, almost savage mouth, the strong cleft chin, and the steely gleam of the eyes that seemed to bore into your insides and read what you were thinking. A doctor—such men were necessary, of course—so were clergymen and soldiers and sailors—perhaps even artists and authors and chorus girls were necessary. And yet, somehow, they antagonized him; they were outside the real practical world, they were disturbing elements, they did not contribute to the settled security of things.

What, after all, were they all but the servants of wealth? And they were getting more and more inclined to domineer and claim a voice in the spending of wealth—what could be more objectionable than a domineering servant? Where would all these fellows be if there weren't men of wealth to support them by employing them? Sir Rollo, for example, cutting people up at three hundred and fifty guineas a time—that's what he charged old Ambleside of Ambleside, Keats & Co.—where would he be if he could only get five shillings a time? Yet here he was talking rank socialism and demanding a subsidy for medical research!

Advice; Not Money

"Taladore," said old Mr. Cairns the banker, when the decanters had been set on the table and cigars were alight, "now, if you don't mind, Sir Rollo wants to talk about his latest craze, and I daresay to screw a little money out of some of you rich fellows."

"By all means," said Mr. Taladore. "Go ahead, Sir Rollo—you got some hard nuts to crack here, I warn you."

Sir Rollo flashed his strangely fascinating smile at his host and leaned forward, his face alight with enthusiasm.

"I don't want so much to extract money from you as individuals," he began, "as to take advantage of the collective wisdom of so many successful men in order to shape out some practical means of raising money for the Eastern hospital."

"Cunning!" chuckled old Mr. Cairns.

"Well, we have to be cunning when we're beggars," admitted Sir Rollo with a laugh. "Now, you all know what a wonderful work this hospital is doing but none of you realize how frightfully we're hampered for want of money." And he plunged into details and figures. Mr. Taladore sat back and listened.

It was one of his moments, one of those comparatively rare hours when it felt good to be a millionaire. Here was this fanatical fellow preaching there with his eyes glowing like a lunatic's, pleading for this hospital of his; and all the time Mr. Taladore knew that in his lawyer's safe lay a will endowing his hospital beyond the man's wildest dreams. It gave him a luxurious feeling to think of that, a feeling of power and splendor. And then, all of a sudden a voice spoke in his mind and said: Why not give him a million or so, now? The idea startled Mr. Taladore so much that he sat up with a jerk and the others thought that he must have been falling asleep. Getting rank socialism and demanding a subsidy for medical research!

But he at once perceived that the idea was ridiculous. Part with a million while he was alive? Absurd—it was quite another thing to leave it. And so strange is the working of the human mind, that a feeling of indignation arose in Mr. Taladore at the idea of giving Dick's money away. Inwardly he knew all the time that it was Dick's money and that the will he had made was merely a gesture of annoyance, a blow struck at his best beloved for the purpose of hurting the best beloved.

Here, I say, continued the voice, what if you die suddenly before you've brought that young fool to heel and the money does go to this fanatic's hospital? Mr. Taladore assured himself indignantly that he was not going to die suddenly and that he would arrange things in plenty of time. He didn't mind giving a hundred or perhaps a thousand to the hospital, but the idea of handing over Dick's fortune was ridiculous—let them get up a mansion house fund if they were so damned hard up. After all these doctor fellows were all out to pamper the working classes.

Suddenly he became aware that his attention had wandered from his guests. Sir Rollo had stopped speaking and old Mr. Cairns was promising him a hundred guineas. Then, another man, a rich produce broker, shook his head

"I can't equal that," he said. "But I'll leave you something in my will, Sir Rollo, I promise."

Sir Rollo looked at him.

Obsessed with Fear

"It's now we want the money, sir," he said earnestly. "But thank you, that's better than nothing. I'll ask you other gentlemen to remember this promise."

"I really mean it," said the produce broker. "Things are too tight in my part of the city just now to allow me to give much away."

"I take it, Sir Rollo," put in another man with a chuckle, "that if our friend here happens to appear on your operating table you won't be prejudiced in favor of the hospital?"

It was a silly joke in bad taste, but Sir Rollo accepted it.

"Lead us not into temptation," he said with a smile. "You know when I think of those poor devils huddled away in some east end slums I don't know that even a millionaire counts for much with me."

"In that case," intervened Mr. Taladore, who was somehow made uncomfortable by the turn of the conversation, "it will be safer to give you a thousand now."

Worthy of Taladore, thought the applauding company. Solid man, solid munificence, and they needn't give so much themselves, now that he had contributed such a sum.

Later, when Mr. Taladore was handing the check to Sir Rollo, something made him ask, "Did you mean what you said just now, when Johnson made his absurd joke?"

Sir Rollo stared at him for a moment.

"It opens out a very big question, doesn't it," he said. "But don't be alarmed, Mr. Taladore. If you ever feel inclined to supplement this wonderful gift of yours with a legacy to the hospital, you'll be perfectly safe in my hands. In any case, there are many other specialists available."

Nevertheless, in the days that followed, Mr. Taladore's thoughts often reverted to the words Sir Rollo had spoken. The problem of what Sir Rollo would do in the circumstances suggested haunted him. He knew that it was perfectly absurd to suppose that a doctor would ever do anything but his best to save the life of his patient; but in spite of that the thing became an obsession with him. He knew, he told himself, that the surface idea that every one was noble and good and motivated by none but the purest motives was so much claptrap—it was merely the working assumption that made it possible to conduct the experiment of civilization.

People were not really like that; they were influenced by all sorts of motives, good or bad, whatever their surface conduct might be. Nobody dare speak out all his thoughts; we are good by compulsion, said Mr. Taladore cynically to himself. He was feeling bitter about life since he had practically lost his son, and it pleased him to be cynical. Yet the actual truth about Mr. Taladore was not entirely that he was good by compulsion; he had a healthy preference for behaving decently.

Mr. Taladore was falling more and more into an unhealthy frame of mind. He brooded over his loneliness, over the base ingratitude of his son who refused to give up his own ideas and adopt his father's; he began to ask himself what pleasure his money really gave him. He began to doubt all his friends and see in them only parasites who clung to him for his money; he looked on the whole world with suspicion and questioned everybody's motives. Suspicious people are always unhappy people; suspicion is a sort of rash that indicates the presence of a poison in the moral system, a poison that is apt to kill people morally, if strong measures are not taken for its eradication.

In spite of the fact that he suspected that Sir Rollo was not to be trusted in the circumstances over which he had been brooding, and in spite of the fact that he knew the belief which he constantly assured himself he held, that his son was a basely ungrateful young scoundrel and wastrel to be unfounded, Mr. Taladore, curiously enough, took no steps to alter the disposition of his fortune. Inwardly he knew that the specialist was a splendid and upright character; inwardly he loved his son more than anything on earth. He knew that he did not intend to disinherit Dick, but he drifted on from day to day, leaving the will as it stood.

In Disguise

One day he resolved to go and look at this wonderful hospital about which Sir Rollo was always writing and speaking. He could have gone at any time and would have been welcomed and shown everything by the enthusiastic staff. Ah, I daresay, he said to himself cunningly. No, he would go alone and unannounced and find out things for himself by a little judicious questioning of underlings and patients what really did go on. He knew those occasions when everything was dressed up for the potential donor and the patients were all told to be happy and smiling, and the nurses were so determinedly cheerful.

Accordingly, he chose the shabbiest suit he could find in his wardrobe and took a bus to the east end. In due course, after a journey through mean and shabby streets that depressed him and made him vaguely uneasy, he dismounted near the hospital. A short walk brought him opposite the place he was seeking.

He stood for a time staring at it, an unnoticeable, dowdily clad elderly man leaning on an umbrella. What he saw across the wide thoroughfare was a range of shabby buildings badly in need of a coat of paint. At one side a half-finished extension, on which work had been stopped owing to lack of money, looked like a ruin swathed in black waterproof covers. A group of unhappy looking women with ailing children and broken down men stood clustered at its out-patients' entrance.

The whole place had externally a drab, depressing appearance in keeping with the drab, depressing surroundings, the muddy street, the lumbering trams, the splashing buses, the procession of giant lorries, the listless, poorly clad women who fingered goods in shabby shops and costermongers' barrows. To complete the picture, rain began to fall from the gray autumn sky. Mr. Taladore shuddered as he put up his umbrella and stepped off the pavement; he was still shuddering when he was struck by the mudguard of a lorry and rolled over and over in the mud.

Wakes Up in Hospital

He awoke three days later to find himself in a little iron bed in a long ward of the hospital. His first impression was of great pain; he must be suffering from every kind of pain in the world, he thought. Then he became conscious of the long, bright room, the rows of beds, all of them occupied by queer looking people, people of a kind he didn't as a rule come into contact with. He groaned a little as he mastered the pain and tried to think. Ah! he remembered. He had stepped off the pavement to cross the road and something had happened. Run over, probably—and they had brought him here, into the very place he was going to visit. Funny how things happened.

So this was the inside of a hospital—Sir Rollo's damned hospital! But why hadn't they given him a private room, if they must bring him here? His thoughts came and went disjointedly between stabs of pain.

The groan had brought a nurse hurrying to his bed. She stood looking down at him anxiously and then smiled kindly, as she realized that he was conscious.

"So you're awake!" she said, brightly. Mr. Taladore thought it a foolish thing to say but he was too weak to be angry; he tried to nod and groaned instead. The nurse bent over him and did something to the pillow.

"You mustn't try to move," she said.

"How did I get here?" whispered Mr. Taladore.

"You were knocked down by a van just opposite," said the nurse. "I don't think you ought to talk."

"But I must know," whispered Mr. Taladore. "Eastern hospital?"

"Yes," said the nurse.

"How long have I been here?"

"Three days."

Mr. Taladore plucked at his chin with the one hand he could use; his face felt strange. He found that he had a stubbly beard on his once clean-shaven face.

"Couldn't they have shaved me?" he asked irritably.

"You were too ill," said the nurse, and added, "but they had to shave the top of your head."

At the Doctor's Mercy

So they had shaved the iron gray locks of which he had been rather proud and let his beard grow!

"Give me a mirror!" demanded Mr Taladore.

"You mustn't talk any more," said the nurse soothingly. "You'll be getting a temperature."

"I'll go on talking till you've given me a mirror," said Mr. Taladore, feebly fierce; and to humor him the nurse brought him a hand mirror. In it he saw a person whom he had some difficulty in recognizing; a shaved head swathed in bandages, a hideous three day beard, nothing in the least like the meticulously clad Mr Taladore or even the shabby Mr. Taladore who had set out to visit this hospital. He was clad in a clean but coarse hospital outfit.

"Don't they know who I am?" he demanded.

"No," said the nurse. "You see, there were no papers in your pocket and no money."

Mr. Taladore thought of the pocket book containing fifty pounds, his watch and other sundries; no doubt his pockets had been rifled before he was brought in—perhaps some one had pushed him under the van with that idea.

"Perhaps you could tell me, now," said the nurse, "so that we could let your family know about it."

"Wait a minute," said Mr. Taladore. "Why can't I move? Am I badly hurt—am I going to die, eh?"

"O, we hope not!" said the nurse soothingly. "You're back was a little hurt and that's why you're strapped up—but we're going to cure all that very soon."

"How?"

"O, just a little operation will put you right. And you're going to have a very famous man to do it, too—he's taking a great interest in your case—it's an unusual one, you see."

"Who?"

"Who do you think? The great Sir Rollo Leeds, himself! Now, do you want to tell me your name and address?"

Mr. Taladore fumbled at his new beard with well simulated perplexity.

"I—I can't remember, nurse—my head seems to get confused."

"There, there!" said the nurse soothingly. "Don't go worrying yourself about that, it'll all come back to you in time. Now, I want you to take a nice little rest."

She settled his pillows, put a screen between him and the light and left him.

He was not sorry; the effort of talking had made him feel very queer. Great waves of cloud seemed to rise in his head and blot out everything and when that happened he felt as if he were sinking softly down into great deeps.

When he came to the surface of things again he saw looking down at him a lean, dark face with grave considering eyes. In his first confused thoughts Mr. Taladore wondered if this might be the angel Gabriel, so noble and aloof from the world did it look. Then his sense cleared a little and he recognized Sir Rollo Leeds. He was dressed in white, a fact which perhaps fostered the illusion.

Strange thoughts began racing through Mr. Taladore's confused brain. Here he was at the mercy of this man who thought nothing of millionaires. But, thank God, he didn't know, did he? He closed his eyes and lay very still, waiting. Neither of the doctors had noticed anything; Sir Rollo had been looking at Mr. Taladore's exposed body, though Mr. Taladore did not know that.

"Pretty hopeless!" he heard the second man murmur; and then Sir Rollo's voice:

"We must do what we can—if we fail, why, he'll be no worse off than he is now. As soon as the opiate begins to work off—say, tomorrow."

"Right. He'll be wide awake by then, poor chap."

Mr. Taladore felt the bedclothes being re-arranged. Then Sir Rollo spoke again:

"If it weren't for that beard, he'd be like a man I met at a dinner of city men, some of them millionaires. Man with a name like Bore—Bore something. He was quite upset because one of them asked what I'd do if I had to operate on a millionaire who'd left all his money to the hospital. I said, 'Lead me not into temptation.' It seemed to worry the fellow, because he asked me afterwards what I meant."

A chuckle from the other doctor.

"Know what I'd like to do in the circumstances!"

An Altruistic Idea

The voices drifted away. Mr. Taladore lay very still. So another man had the same devilish idea, and he was at their mercy! In his weakened brain the two doctors assumed the character of implacable enemies, bent on destroying him in order that the poor might benefit.

The poor—millions of men and women and children who suffered! What was their suffering like, he wondered? You were always hearing about the sufferings of the poor. People who lived in those slums he had passed through and didn't have enough to eat. Was their suffering anything like this pain of his? He had never felt real pain before. He mustn't die—he must cry out that he was Taladore, the millionaire, and demand all the best doctors of the world and everything that money could buy for his assistance. A poor man lying here couldn't do that, could he?

And yet, if he did proclaim himself what would happen. They were going to operate at once—there would be no time to change his will. They might know—somebody might tell them that if he died their hospital would get all his money. If it had been themselves he wouldn't have worried—they were upright gentlemen—but these men were fanatics about their poor, their suffering poor.

They wouldn't let him change his will, if they got to know about it. You read strange things about doctors becoming almost mad about the relief of suffering. They would say he wasn't strong enough—they wouldn't let him see his lawyer.

And then, suddenly these distressful fancies ceased and Mr. Taladore had a vision. He seemed to be walking along the mean little streets with their tiny, ugly houses set in rows almost back to back; and as he walked along he could see into the crowded rooms. Tired women surrounded by ragged children, all in one room. Fever-stricken looking beds, washing festooned on strings; sick children, hungry children, ailing children. Tired men coming home, worn out like their wives, to the room that was their home. Rooms with dirty, drabby women, gin soaked and evil. Evil looking men lounging in doorways.

He kept walking along the streets

HARLEY AND JOAN by ROLAND PERTWEE

THE STORY IN RESUME.

Harley Trevelyan, spending the last night of his leave from the front in London, dines with Paula Drayton, whose younger brother, David Drayton, through Trevelyan's influence, has been assigned to his own battery. Paula tells him she loves him. Harley is walking the streets when the Zeppelins raid London, and, being used to gunfire, does not run to cover. A young woman in a window sends her brother to bring him into the house, and he discovers that the boy is Freddie Miller, an old schoolmate, and the girl is Joan. With Joan he goes up on the roof to watch the air raid, and they see an airplane shoot down one of the Zepe. Harley realizes he is in love with this girl. Freddie and he leave for the front, and when Harley rejoins his battery he discovers that Paula's brother, a second lieutenant, already is on hand. Maj. Fawlk, Harley's commanding officer, writes a letter to Joan's father intimating that Harley is in love with Paula, and Joan, wondering, talks with Paula. Paula goes to Amiens with a relative. Harley visits her there, and they become engaged. Young Drayton is killed. Catching a Bavarian robbing the dead, Harley kills him in a hand to hand encounter. Harley is reported killed, but Joan receives a letter from him from a German prison camp, and with it confounds Maj. Fawlk. Harley escapes from prison in Germany, and gets home in time to take part in the armistice celebration. Fawlk tells Paula that Trevelyan's cowardice caused her brother's death. She goes to kill Trevelyan, but fails to do so.

INSTALLMENT XII.

The Game of Cards.

PAULA and Fawlk met later in the day at Paula's house in Clarges street.

Four new packs of cards in tartan wrappers lay on a small table beside Paula's couch.

Evan Fawlk was in excellent spirits when he arrived.

From his jacket pocket he produced a small book and dropped it in her lap. Its title was "Confessions of a Card Sharper," and although the book was written in the profoundly humble spirit of a man who had at last witnessed the errors of his ways, it ventilated for the guidance of future generations, a variety of methods for enriching oneself at the card table at the expense of unsuspecting opponents.

"I nearly committed the folly of asking the advice of an acquaintance who is a member of the Magic circle," Fawlk admitted. "But in an affair of this kind we cannot be too careful." He smiled and added, "Nothing can be more discreet than a box of old books in the Charing Cross road. You will find I have penciled a paragraph on page ninety-six. There are also some plates. It is all very informing."

While Paula read he fingered the packs of cards lovingly. Paula digested the paragraph slowly and nodded.

"A hot iron," he said, "should melt the sealing wax on these wrappers so as to enable us to open them without tearing the paper. Shall we try?"

Paula nodded towards the bell but before ringing it he discreetly covered the cards with a silk handkerchief.

A maid answered the bell and went to fetch an electric iron which coupled up with a wall plug.

It was Fawlk who attended to this part of the business exhibiting exquisite care to avoid scorching the wrappers while melting the wax.

"Now," he said, laying the open packs before her, "I am sure a needle would be more at home in your nimble fingers than in mine."

While Paula Drayton pricked the backs of the court cards in the manner prescribed by the diagram, her fingers itched to fling every pack into the grate.

The inspiration had been hers, but it was Fawlk who alone found any satisfaction in it. To Paula, sitting there pricking away a man's reputation, while Fawlk with his hunched shoulders and grinning cavernous face watched over her like a cat, the whole business had become specious and contemptible.

But somehow she carried out the task, pushed back the table and moved to the window.

It was dark now and Fawlk's reflection showed in the window glass, bending over the table, folding the packs with the precision of a chemist. Warming the wax so that it adhered again and replacing the paper bands with the dealer's name upon them.

I'll Kill You

"There," he kept saying. "There!" Moving his tongue from between his teeth and breathing in heavy relief as each little package was completed to his satisfaction. "There! and I defy any one to guess they have been tampered with. Only one more to do." A pause — the exhausted breath. "There!"

"If you say that again," said Paula, "I shall scream."

Evan Fawlk stroked his chin caressingly. In his preoccupation he had, perhaps, made the mistake of treating her too much like a man. He had made no allowance for feminine nerves, emotion, excitement.

"Poor little lady," he murmured, and moved to her side, "and you are being so brave, too—so courageous."

With a gesture of almost paternal tenderness he put a circling arm about her shoulders.

Like a startled animal Paula sprang away and hit him across the mouth with the back of her hand.

"Get away—you. If you touch me—I'll kill you."

Their surprise was mutual—his at his own misjudgment of her mood—hers at the reawakening of rebellious surface senses which but a few days before had been dull even to the grab and kiss assault of a man in a taxicab.

"How dare you—dare you?"

She stood away panting.

It speaks highly for his self-control that he managed to force a mechanical smile, and even murmured an apologetic explanation.

His nature could not readily forgive a blow. The last person to strike him in the face had been her brother. Later on perhaps, when Harley was down and out, and Joan free, he might tell her so. There was a certain piquancy in the idea. David Drayton had got away with it unscratched. Death had spread its shield between them. Later on—well—one would see. But not yet. There was still too much for her to do.

"You must forgive a clumsy fool," he said, "even though sympathy hardly merits such rough handling."

"I'm sorry," she said, but there was no regret in her voice. "I'd like to be alone. I'm not fit to be with any one. Please go."

"At once," he said. "And somehow you will contrive to exchange those cards?"

"Yes—yes—yes."

He left his telephone number scribbled on the corner of her blotter and went.

What a Lovely Woman!

That night Paula wrote to Harley.

"I must see you, if only for five minutes. I shall be here at 10:30 tomorrow morning. Please, Harley. Paula."

She posted it herself.

"P. S. Don't ring up."

At ten fifteen next morning she was in a taxi on the opposite side of Duke street when Harley came from the flats. She gave him three minutes start, jumped out of the taxi and went in. A lift boy was polishing the copper newel of the banister rail.

"Lift, miss?" he asked.

Paula shook her head.

"No, I'll walk up."

"No trouble, miss," said the boy admiringly. "Pleasure."

"I'd rather."

She passed him and ran lightly upstairs.

Yes, the door opened.

Paula did not hesitate. Freddie Miller, any of the servants, might have been there, but she took a chance. The flat was empty. Half a minute later she was descending the stairs. The exchange had been made. Four packs of cards were in her bag, but not the ones she had brought.

"Was they out, miss?" the boy inquired.

"No, I don't know. I only wanted to leave a letter."

The boy's eyes followed her across the street. He was a movie fan. He liked them tall and dark and southern and slinky.

"Coo! What a lovely woman," he said.

Paula dismissed her taxi at Knightsbridge and drifted into the palatial showrooms of Sherlock and Mayduke.

The colonel, she was informed by an ex-sergeant major, was conferring with the major in the board room.

"Not but what," he ventured to add, "bein' as 'ow it's you, miss, he might be prepared to 'old over fer a bit."

Inquiry by telephone proved the accuracy of his surmise. Paula was invited to ascend immediately.

This she did by means of a mahogany staircase and under the aegis of two second lieutenants.

"Miss Drayton, sir," said one of the twain, and held open the door to allow her to pass.

The Warning

The conference upon which Sherlock and Mayduke were so earnestly engaged was the discussion of two dozen oysters and a quart of "Black Velvet" (subsequently entered against the entertainment account).

They greeted Paula with cries of welcome which included "Yoicks" and "View, hulloa."

"You've chipped in, old dear, on the very crack o' time," Mayduke declared, then pointing at the dish of oysters with a slice of folded brown bread and butter. "What do you say? A tinkle of Wilton's and the thing's done."

Paula shook her head.

"Nothing to eat," she said, and turning to Sherlock, "I wondered, if you'd nothing to do tonight, you'd take me to Murrays?"

"And what better?" replied the gallant colonel. "What better? Only," and here his face assumed an expression of barren despair and he tugged at his cavalry mustache, "only, childie —" his finger flapped open an engagement diary and ran down a list of dates, "only, my dear childie, it's down here in black and white that your most admiring servant can't do it."

"O, very well," said Paula coldly, "if you can't, it doesn't matter."

At this not unnatural display of feminine pique and disappointment Mayduke came loyally to the rescue of his ally.

"The colonel 'ud cut the engagement like a shot, old thing," he declared, "if it wasn't for lettin' the party down. Yer see it's a poker party, and if we didn't turn up it 'ud wreck the show. Wreck it," he added in a voice so loud and pregnant with drama as to suggest that, compared with such a calamity, the loss of the Lusitania was a mere bagatelle.

"I see," said Paula. "I couldn't hope to compete with that. Where is the party?"

"At dear old Trevelyan's little gray home in Duke street."

Paula looked surprised—startled.

"O," she said. "O!"

"Why the amazement, childie? You know him, don't you?"

"I used to know him—rather well," she answered slowly.

"A grand chap," volunteered Mayduke. "A thorough white man and a sahib."

Sahib, being his favorite word, was given peculiar emphasis.

"You think so. I see. Well," and with an air of finality Paula gathered up her gloves and bag.

"Don't run away," said Sherlock, scenting scandal. "What's the mystery about Trevelyan?"

"None."

"Now, now—among friends."

"There's no mystery. If you can afford to play poker there, why not?"

"I can afford to try and get some of my losses back," said Mayduke ruefully.

Paula started and stared at him.

"O! So you have lost? Badly?"

"Quite enough."

"Well, then," she began, stopped and shook her head. "No, better not."

"Now then, out with it."

"I was only going to say, you might find it cheaper to cut your losses."

"What are you driving at," said the colonel reproachfully, for, to do him justice, he was shocked. "After all—one ought to be careful. Doesn't do—makin' innuendoes of that kind."

"I agree," said Paula. "One ought to be careful. If I were playing I would be careful and perhaps rather watchful, too."

She threw a glance at the clock. "Good-by, I must go."

They were too dumfounded even to hold the door open for her.

"That's the most amazing thing I ever heard," said Sherlock. "Damn it, it's amazing."

Mayduke drove a murderous fork into an oyster.

"I wonder if there is anything in it," he said.

Freddie Is Restless

Freddie Miller was more than usually restless that night.

No, he didn't want any dinner—one was always eating—wasted half one's life at table—or in bed. Food and sleep! That was all that ever happened in England these days.

"The Beak at Bow street was altogether too fresh this morning," he complained. "Stung me a pony for doing forty-two along the embankment and suspended my license for three months. Had the sauce to remember my name and talked to me like a father. Blathered a lot of rot about public danger I told him the public had been in danger for four years, and it would be a pity if they got out of the habit too quickly. He didn't like that—not a bit. Looked at me over the top of his glasses and advised me—'Let me advise you, Mr. Miller'—got a voice like some one chipping marble—advised me to watch my step."

He stopped and mixed himself another cocktail. The fifth.

"Watch my foot! What right has the law to wag a finger at me? If it hadn't been for me and you and a million like us there wouldn't be any law or any other damn thing. A country fit for heroes, what? I don't think! Fit for feather beds and belly stuffers more like. Gugh! Muzzles—that's what they expect us to wear—muzzles and a leading rein. Hullo, the gin's nearly out."

"I wonder it's lasted so long," said Harley.

ILLUSTRATION BY W. H. WIENER.

—any of the servants might have been there, but she took a chance.

Freddie Miller refused to take offense.

"Afraid I shall get tight," he grinned.

"You will after a few more."

Freddie shook his head, but put down the bottle.

"Then I'll go dry for a bit. Got to keep my wits about me tonight. Got to make a coup somehow."

Harley pushed back his plate and rang for a servant to clear away.

"Then you'd better hurry up. I'm going to cut out these parties."

"Why?"

"They've lost the friendly touch—too cut-throat—too much of a business."

"O, rot," said Freddie. "What's it matter anyway.

He pulled the card table into position, took a pack from the drawer and tore off the wrapper and began to shuffle expertly.

Cosmo Regan and Collier who had dined together were the first arrivals.

Regan, carefree, boisterous, his big schoolboy hands landing with clumsy affection on any shoulder within reach. To catch some one bending and leave the imprint of his ten inch palm upon the invitation offered was to him the cream of humor and good fellowship. That this laughing, easy going hobbledehoy of a man was capable of turning as hard and as cold as steel was not easy to believe by any one who had not witnessed the transformation.

Collier, lean, static, remote, with pale eyes and a voice so low as to be barely audible, was of a different type. A precise, meticulous officer was he, with a clockwork mind, an astonishing ability for remembering detail. It was said that he carried in his head the complete G-1098's of each unit within the administration of his department. It is certain he knew the lay of every trout in the half mile of dry fly water that he rented on the Meon.

"The Circus"

Hammersley, the next to arrive, was still the same bighearted fellow of the battery days, conspicuous for long legs and mutilated idioms. He had not yet been demobilized but was "pinning down a home job" and trying "to psycho the final dregs of conscription not to desert."

"How's morale in your part of the landscape, sir?" he asked Regan, who was in charge of a depot in South London.

"Gone to hell," was the reply "Pace is destructive of discipline. 'Tis like a migration of swallows the way they desart, and themselves the scourings of the crates that niver saw an honest day's service throughout the war."

"Shoot 'em," said Collier, who, by virtue of a thorough acquaintance with king's regs, always knew the right thing to do.

Regan shook his head.

"Shootin's too good for 'em," he declared. "Pwhat they want," and he searched his imagination, "pwhat they want is—a bloody good kick in the pants."

The arrival of Sherlock and Mayduke was heralded by a metrical tattoo on the door knocker. ONE—one and two three—(pause) ONE ONE

Collier shivered. He had been congratulating himself on their absence. Cads—that's what they were.

"The circus!" said Regan with a grimace.

To allay the impression that their suspicions had been in any way aroused, the entrance of Sherlock and Mayduke was conducted with excessive exuberance.

Mayduke had gone so far as to bring a ukelele and strummed himself into the room with a musical accompaniment.

"Hello, war office," he greeted Collier, and breaking into a popular ditty, sang:

"What do you want to make those eyes at me for?
When they don't mean what they say——"

"Perhaps they do," said Collier shortly, with a tight upper lip.

Sherlock was less noisy than his companion. His method of making an impression was conveyed by a series of paralyzing handgrips intended to prove that whatever other men might be he was loyal to the core—to the CORE. Grip! Zingo! "Good man, Hammersley." Grip! "Cosmo! Good man." Grip! But he met a Greek in Cosmo Regan. If handshaking on these lines was the order, two could play. The ten inch palm shut like the door of a safe and what had been within it waved limp fingertips at Freddie Miller who was busy with a decanter of whisky and a trayful of glasses.

"Faites les jeux, messieurs," cried Mayduke, proving familiarity with the casinos of France. "Faites les jeux. La seance commence à table numero un. And let me tell you, young Trevelyan," he added, "I'll have your boots off you I'll have your boots."

He picked up the cards and began to shuffle. The others drew up chairs to the table. Harley was the last to sit down. He felt a curious unwillingness to play—a distaste for the whole business.

The day had been flat—unprofitable. It had begun wrong, with the visit to Paula in response to her urgent summons. He had been given a note at her house saying briefly that she didn't wish to see him after all. Joan had gone to Camberley—a duty visit to a relative. A useless sort of day. His meeting with Fawlk the night before had recurred unpleasantly in his memory.

The Game Begins

"Like one of those hunting cats that lie along a bough and wait."

He wondered what Fawlk and Paula had found to say to one another.

"Table waiting — come along, old man, come along." From Mayduke.

Harley picked up the cards and started to deal mechanically.

"First knave," he said.

The first knave fell to Sherlock. Harley swept up the cards and passed them.

Sherlock gave the pack to Freddie, who was on his left.

Freddie was always spectacular with a pack of cards. They pattered like rain as he shuffled and flowed to and fro between his hands.

"As this is one of our last merry meetings, what about doubling the limit," he suggested.

"Phwat you like," nodded Regan, for he was Irish.

Hammersley was agreeable, and Collier was the last man in the world to decline a proposal where refusal might be construed to suggest that he was nervous. Mayduke, however, flashed a glance at Sherlock who responded with a flicker of an eyelid.

Harley, as host, could scarcely oppose a majority.

Freddie cut the cards slickly.

"Your deal, sir."

But Sherlock did not pick them up.

"Double the limit," he said, "and we'll have a new deck of cards."

The suggestion coming before a single hand had been played was unusual.

Collier's eyebrows came down critically.

"Phwat's the matter with these?" Regan demanded.

"Nothing in the world, Cosmo," said the colonel blandly.

"As the challenged party he has the right to choose the weapons," said Mayduke, bringing wit to the rescue.

Harley opened the drawer and tossed an unopened pack upon the table.

The game began.

It was about eleven o'clock when Freddie Miller began to win. He seemed unable to do wrong. Four times he drew three cards to a pair and filled. About the same time Harley, who, until then, had done no good, also began to win. Within half an hour they had amassed every chip on the table and were selling them back for I. O. U's.

During this run of unbroken luck Sherlock and Mayduke had been eccentrically silent. The colonel's expression was vigilant and Mayduke's small gray eyes were flickering restlessly between Freddie and their host. He remarked that while Harley was always ready to double up Freddie Miller's stake, Freddie invariably dropped out when the order was reversed. It was evident that he refused to put against his friend.

And why? Was it because he knew something—knew better?

Freddie Miller was dealing again.

He finished and put the pack down between himself and Sherlock. But before he had time to pick up his own cards, Sherlock's left hand came down flat upon them while his right closed over the remainder of the pack.

Three Cards Missing

"What's the man doing?" asked Collier softly.

Freddie pushed back his chair.

From Regan came a hearty burst of laughter such as a man will make who witnesses the folly of a child.

"Boys," said the colonel. "Let your cards lie. Don't pick 'em up."

"Why?" Harley demanded.

The colonel favored him with an innocent and winsome smile.

"An experiment in counting, dear boy, that's all. Seven of us playing Thirty-five cards dealt; leaving, with the joker, eighteen cards in the pack."

Swiftly he began to deal the remaining cards face upwards on the table.

There were fifteen.

"Fifteen," said Sherlock. "Now, if we each counted our own cards to make sure it isn't a misdeal."

Once more Regan laughed, but the laugh had lost the quality of humor.

Harley got up. He was white with anger.

"Are you suggesting——"

"It goes a good way beyond that," was the answer.

"By God, I thought this was a gentleman's house," cried Mayduke jumping up and sending his chair over with a crash.

"One moment," said Harley. "If every one would stop where they are we'll get this matter sorted out."

"We had better, I think," said Collier softly.

The dealt cards were faced. Two kings and a joker were missing.

"Funny, isn't it," said the colonel.

Freddie Miller moved to the sideboard for a drink.

"Nice party!" he said. "Jolly fellers! Charming."

Whisky splashed into the glass.

It was Collier who suggested that he should return to the table.

O, yes, of course he would—delighted—there was every inducement.

Then Regan, his good humor vanished into a berg of ice:

"Col. Sherlock, I'd be obliged if you'd run your hands through my pockets, and I suggest that every gentleman in this room submits to similar treatment."

"Damn sound, sir," Mayduke applauded. "Spoken like a white man."

Cosmo Regan shed upon him a blistering glare.

"When I need a nosegay from your garden I'll ask for it."

"Look here," said Hammersley, the easy going, "isn't all this rather a mistake? What about putting up the shutters and drifting home?"

But Sherlock held up a hand.

"As senior officer present," said he, "I take charge of this affair. Some one has cheated and I don't leave this room until I know who."

"You don't—no one leaves," said Harley. "But these rooms are mine and what goes on here is my responsibility. If my guests are asked to turn out their pockets, as host, I claim the privilege of being the first."

Stripping off his coat and waistcoat he threw them over a chair.

Mayduke stepped forward with alacrity.

"Not you," said Harley.

"Eh! What's the matter with me, then?"

"I don't know you well enough to say."

Mayduke's jaw dropped.

"For sheer nerve!" he exclaimed.

Harley beckoned to Regan with a nod.

"If you'd be good enough."

Harley Is Searched

Cosmo Regan had the courtesy to make the search a thorough one. But it was the intrepid Mayduke, scarlet with indignation at Harley's affront, who opened the drawer in the card table and taking out the rejected pack invited Collier to count the cards aloud.

"It would be easy for any one sitting with that drawer between their knees——" he suggested pointedly.

Collier's voice, lower than ever, recorded a tight lipped—

"Fifty-two and a joker."

"Nothing, av course," said Regan, dropping Harley's coat on a chair.

The two partners exchanged a look of surprise and disappointment.

Harley Trevelyan had not moved from the center of the room. Sherlock turned up the chair he had occupied, but the missing cards were not tucked into the webbing on the underside.

Hammersley, who could not endure being fingered on account of ticklishness, had stripped himself to the underwear.

"Me next," Freddie insisted, "and don't forget the conjuror's pocket in the leg of my trousers."

"Damn it, there is a conjuror's pocket," Mayduke exclaimed.

There was—but it was empty.

"Nothing up my sleeves but my arms," said Freddie.

He was the only one present who refused to accept the gravity of the situation. He failed altogether to tune in on the carrier wave of suspicion with which the air was charged.

Sherlock and Mayduke submitted themselves to the search with an ostentatious innocence that was an insult to the company.

"You won't find anything—but go ahead by all means. My letter case! Certainly. No, that's a photograph. Rather a good looker! What?"

Collier was the last to undergo the ordeal. He bore it in silence, returned to the card table and mechanically shuffled and reshuffled the pack that Sherlock had refused to play with.

"There's only one explanation," said Regan, buttoning his waistcoat, "the cards were missing from the pack in the farst inchstance."

"By gosh, why did no one think of that before," said Hammersley.

In his philosophy any straw was worth grabbing at.

"Because it isn't true," Collier replied. "Some one had four kings during the game."

"I did," from Harley.

Collier nodded.

"The mystery deepens," said Freddie.

Mayduke's small furtive eyes settled upon him. An idea was hovering at the back of them—an idea—no, an inspiration.

"I'm going to get myself a drink," he said. "I'm going to get a drink and I want every one here to watch me get it."

The Discovery

Pulling up his sleeves to leave his wrists bare he approached the sideboard, paused dramatically and lifted high the heavy salver upon which the drinks stood. Beneath it, close to the edge of the sideboard, lay three cards.

"What a crust!" said he. "It was clever of you, young Miller, to get that drink — but not quite clever enough."

Every one save Collier turned to Freddie Miller, who, stretched on a tilted chair with his legs thrust out before him and his chin on his shirt front, was laughing, bitterly—fatalistically.

"Good fielding, Mayduke," he said. "Trust a little worm like you to have spotted that pass."

Harley crossed the room and took him by the shoulders.

"Freddie—Freddie."

But Freddie wriggled himself free.

"Ah, let me alone, damn you. When a man's out—he's out. Think I'm going to crawl or whine? I go to hell by a path of my own choosing."

The colonel's fist crashed into the open palm of his other hand.

"By heaven and all green stuff! I wouldn't have believed it. I wouldn't have believed it," he cried. "One of my own fellars, too. A man I trusted."

"Ah, shut up," said Regan.

"What's that?"

"Shut up, ye damned windbag."

From a corner of the room where he was struggling with his braces buttons Hammersley was repeating schoolboy fashion:

"O, I say—O, I say."

For he was fond of Freddie Miller. Only Collier kept aloof from it all, his fingers moving mechanically over the cards spread out before him.

Sherlock had drawn himself up like a guardsman on parade.

"I'll deal with your insult in order," he began.

"Shut up," Regan roared. "This boy worked with me in France, and he was a damned good boy. Phwat's happened tonight can be explained."

"It'll need to be," from Mayduke.

"It will be," said Harley. "Listen to me, you men. Freddie, here, isn't normal—hasn't been normal for a long time. He got a wipe on the head out there doing a job any man might have been proud of."

"I'll second that," from Regan.

Harley took the bit in his teeth and went down the course. Never before had he exhibited in public so much emotion.

"That wipe hasn't had time to settle down. Every one knows a man in this state can't be judged by normal standards."

"So I'm ga-ga, eh? I'm for the nose sense house, am I?" crooned Freddie softly. "Straws in the hair, what?"

Harley gripped his arm.

"Good God, you must be able to see for yourselves. Every man in this room has seen service and knows what I am saying is true. What's happened tonight doesn't count—mustn't count——"

"It's counted to the tune of sixty-five of the best," said Mayduke.

"Then let's wash out tonight's winnings and losses and if you've any doubt about other times you've played here and will look up what you've dropped I'll——"

"May I ask a question?" said Collier.

It was the first time he had uttered a word for so long that his presence was almost forgotten.

"Well?"

"Who bought these cards?"

"I did," Harley replied.

"And the wrappers were broken in this room tonight."

"They were."

"There are two more packs in that drawer. May I see them, please?"

"Is there any need," said Harley irritably.

"I think there is."

The Marked Cards

In silence Collier broke the wrappers and spread the cards out before him.

"Yes," he said, and nodded. "Interesting! Miller—where did you learn to fake cards?"

But Freddie had lapsed into a kind of stupor.

Collier repeated the question imperatively.

"Fake cards! Don't know what you mean." He roused himself. "Feller I met showed me how to pull a few court cards and palm 'em."

"But where did you learn to mark cards with a needle?" Collier insisted.

"Never learnt," said Freddie, "don't know what you're jawing about."

There could be no question as to his sincerity. Shown up, caught out, nothing was to be gained by denial.

Collier turned his attention to Harley.

"These are the packs you bought?"

"Yes, I suppose so. Yes, they are."

Collier rose and pushed back his chair.

"Good night," he said shortly.

But Mayduke intercepted him.

"What's up now?"

"When Trevelyan has finished his rhetorical defense of his friend," Collier answered, "he may be able to explain his own successes tonight."

"Look here!" said Harley, dangerously.

"And look there!" said Collier and pointed at the table. "Four packs of cards and every court card in each pack is marked." Then lifting his voice for the first time, "You bloody hypocritical swine."

He picked up his hat and walked out.

The silence that followed was broken by Freddie. He had been staring at Harley with horror in his eyes.

"No No," he cried wildly "Show me those cards. I marked them—I marked them—yes, look, you can see where I did it. He wouldn't—Harley wouldn't—I know he wouldn't——"

Cosmo Regan brushed him aside.

"Stick together," said he, "it's loikely to be the only company the future will offer ye."

He went out with Hammersley. Hammersley who, absurdly enough looked as if he wanted to cry.

Mayduke waited long enough to tear up his I. O. Us.

"A very nice outfit," said the colonel. "If you men were still in the service I'd have you drummed out—drummed out."

The front door closed behind them.

By Meta Given

Correct Mixing Is One of the Most Important Factors to Consider in Obtaining Delicious Biscuits.

HOT biscuit! How do you like yours? A rich golden or light brown, tiny or big, fat or thin? Tell us your choice and we can make a good guess as to where you originated. Southern people like thin biscuits with plenty of crust, while northern folk prefer thicker ones with much more crumb than crust.

Whatever our differences of opinion may be about features of minor importance all of us are agreed on what constitutes good biscuits—tender crust, soft creamy white crumb of even texture, and good flavor—and who doesn't like them hot? The finest biscuits can never delight and satisfy unless they are served just the instant they finish baking and are piping hot.

Why our best hotels, those that are meticulous about every other detail of food service, will deliberately bring one cold biscuits all rolled up in a beautiful linen doily or napkin is something I've never been able to fathom. The only reason that I can think of is that the man who reigns supreme in the kitchen has never learned to appreciate hot biscuits himself and he cannot understand what a sore disappointment cold biscuits are to hot bread devotees.

Those of us who know the prime qualities of good biscuits would a thousand times rather have them brought to us rapidly from the oven in the pan in which they were baked and so hot that they can scarcely be handled, than to have cold ones beautifully served.

Southern Biscuits.

The southland has a reputation for its biscuit. Many households serve them at least once a day, which might lead one to believe that the south is the land of perfect biscuits. But all southern cooks are not experts at this business. The best and the poorest biscuits I've eaten have been in the south.

Some of my most vivid memories of childhood are of good old fashioned southern housewives making biscuit. My maternal grandmother was one of them that I used to watch. Her flour was kept in a wooden barrel with a tight fitting lid that lifted off. In the barrel was a big wooden bowl that always had some flour left in it from preceding biscuit making operations.

A pint or so of new flour was scooped out of the barrel, put into the large hoop-like sifter and sifted into the center of the bowl. A pinch of baking soda and salt were added to the newly sifted flour and with the hands the soda and salt were blended with the flour. Now and then a little of the flour that was originally in the bowl got mixed in too. A well in the center was made, then fat was added —lard or some left over strained bacon or pork drippings. This was worked lightly into the flour, then sour milk or sour cream was poured in on top of the fat-flour mixture.

At this point a vigorous manipulation of the biscuit mixture was begun with the right hand while the left hand turned the bowl to facilitate the mixing. If the newly sifted flour was insufficient to make the dough stiff enough, flour from the sides was drawn in to obtain the right consistency.

Molding the Dough.

Directly after the mixing came the molding of the dough. Rarely was a dough board or a biscuit cutter used. The process of forming the biscuit was done at lightning speed. Bits of dough were pinched off and turned over so quickly in lightly floured hands that they were almost instantaneously smooth balls of soft dough ready to take a dive into the baking pan which had been previously prepared. I say "take a dive" because the pan contained a considerable amount of melted fat. The top side of the biscuit was down as it was laid in the pan, but just the minute it touched the fat it was dexterously flipped over. The result was a film of fat on top, bottom, and sides of biscuit.

The biscuits were baked immediately in a hot oven. And those old cooks were exceptionally good judges of temperature. Nine cases out of ten grandmother's biscuits were delicious. Once in a while they were a fizzle. In which case they were spotty with soda and smelt like soda. Other times they were flat and soggy. Occasionally this happened when company came. Perhaps more flour or soda had been used, ingredients not easily guessed at, or the milk was too sour or not sour enough. But considering equipment and materials, our grandmothers were marvels when it came to judging proportions. Recipes didn't seem necessary to them. Long years of apprenticeship made them skillful.

Good Recipes Necessary.

The girls of today haven't the time or opportunity to learn cooking as the girls of yesterday. In order to know how to bake it is necessary to have a good recipe and have carefully written directions accurately describing the process. And biscuits are no exception to the rule.

We find that a recipe with two cups of flour [sifted after it is measured] is sufficiently large to make an amount of dough easy to manipulate. With more flour we are apt to have difficulties. If a larger quantity of biscuits is required, it is better to make two batches. Three teaspoons of baking powder and ½ teaspoon salt are sufficient for two cups of flour. Flour, salt and baking powder should not only be stirred together but also sifted together. Three tablespoons of fat for this amount of flour gives a tender biscuit and ¾ cup of milk is about what is needed. The amount of milk may have to be slightly varied due to the variation in composition of flour. One can best decide this after making some biscuits.

To my mind the most important phase of biscuit making is the way in which the materials are mixed together. I think an inferior recipe or ingredients may be taken and if skillfully put together will result in fairly good biscuits. The best of ingredients put together poorly will result in hard, lumpy, soggy, flat or sleek appearing specimens.

First Steps in Biscuit Making.

As in all baking the first thing to do is to assemble the necessary materials, prepare the baking pan, and light the oven. All purpose or family flour is best. Milk is better than water and a solid fat is better than oil. Any baking powder is good. Skilful biscuit makers can produce fine results with all types. But amateurs are more likely to be successful with a double acting alum powder, as this does not lose so much of the carbon dioxide, which is necessary to raise the biscuit in the cold, as the tartrate or phosphate powders do.

Measure sifted flour carefully, add salt and baking powder. Mix and sift them into mixing bowl. Add fat. Rub it in with fingers until the mass resembles dry coarse corn meal. This "rubbing in" must be done quickly. Make a well in the center, pour in the milk, and combine the liquid and dry ingredients by stirring together quickly. When flour is just dampened the dough is quite soft, actually wet-appearing. Now stir vigorously, say a half dozen times, until the dough adheres to the spoon in one mass. This stirring slightly stiffens and makes the dough smooth.

Turn immediately onto a lightly floured board. Be sure there is enough flour, but not too much. Knead lightly for about 10 seconds. Some women prefer to stir the dough about one minute, and then do not knead at all. Both methods are practically the same. However, I prefer to stir, rather than knead. Pat dough out with the palm or fingers slightly floured to ½ inch thick. Cut with a floured biscuit cutter of the desired size. Two inches in diameter is suitable for most occasions.

Never knead the trimmings into a ball of dough that must again be patted out and cut if you want these to be tender biscuits. Better bake the scraps just as is. Some member of the family is always glad to eat the "tails or horns," as children like to call the queer shaped pieces. Place biscuits in pan. They are now ready to bake. About 12 minutes at 425 degrees F. is sufficient for complete baking.

Importance of Correct Mixing.

Mixing the dough is the place where failure begins. Too often cooks undermix rather than overmix. Lumpy biscuits with spots on crust and through crumb have been mixed just long enough to put them together, but not to combine them well. Brown spots, too, are unattractive. The latest information shows that these are due to the soda in the baking powder, which due to the rapidity of the process has not been completely neutralized by the acid. On the other hand, if we knead or stir dough too long the biscuits will have a slick appearance which is not pleasing. The trick is to mix the biscuits to the exact stage. Care and experience will soon teach one what this stage is.

Biscuits are simple to make once one acquires the knack. And there is no better way of pleasing one's friends than serving them delicious hot biscuit with some fine jelly or marmalade. I've known guests who thought it a great treat to have just biscuits, jelly or honey, and some beverage. I've always enjoyed making biscuits (since I learned how) and have been guilty a number of times of making up a second batch for those who are not fortunate enough to have biscuits often. My guests are always glad to have a recess and then enjoy the second lot.

Plain hot biscuits are truly appealing. But there are so many delicious ways one can vary the basic recipes. Classic shortcake is a simple variation. All that is necessary to obtain a richer dough is to increase the fat one tablespoon. The dough may be baked in biscuit shape or patted into round cake tins, then baked and split. At this season of the year peach, raspberry and banana are most appropriate. Next June, strawberry shortcake will be in order.

No matter how we serve baking powder biscuits, in their own natural guise or dressed up in one of the many attractive ways, if the job has been well done the cook has something to be proud of and something that her family and guests will always be glad to eat. I have often thought that if some good cook would start a hot biscuit shop in the heart of some big city and serve faultless biscuits and real good jam, jelly or marmalade, she would soon distinguish herself in more ways than one.

BISCUIT.

2 cups family flour.
3 teaspoons baking powder.
1 teaspoon salt.
3 tablespoons fat.
¾ cup milk.

Sift flour, then measure. Resift with other dry ingredients into mixing bowl. Rub fat into the flour with fingers until appearance is like coarse cornmeal. Add milk and mix quickly with a fork. Stir until flour disappears and then add four or five stirs to smooth and slightly stiffen the dough. Turn immediately onto a floured board. Pat dough out with hand, or roll to ½ inch thickness. Cut and place on oiled tin. Bake in hot oven (425-450 degrees Fahrenheit). About 12 minutes are required for baking.

Yield: 12 biscuits—2¼ inches in diameter. One biscuit: Total, 84 calories; protein, 10 calories; fat, 15 calories; carbohydrates, 59 calories.

To make shortcake—Use biscuit recipe, increasing the fat to 4 tablespoons. Mix and bake in usual way. While hot break open, spread with melted butter and add crushed sweetened fruit to lower part. Replace cap and add more fruit.

To make cobbler—Roll shortcake dough to ¼ inch thickness and lay over the top of sweetened fruit. Bake in hot oven (425 to 450 degrees Fahrenheit).

To make drop dumplings—Use biscuit recipe omitting fat and increasing the milk to 1 cup. Mix as for biscuit. Drop by tablespoonfuls on top of any meat stew. Cover kettle closely and cook 12 minutes. Be sure there is sufficient water in the stew to prevent burning. Too much liquid gives stew an undesirable soupy consistency.

To make drop biscuit—Use biscuit recipe increasing the milk to 1 cup. Drop soft dough by tablespoonfuls onto oiled pan. Bake in hot oven (425 to 450 degrees Fahrenheit).

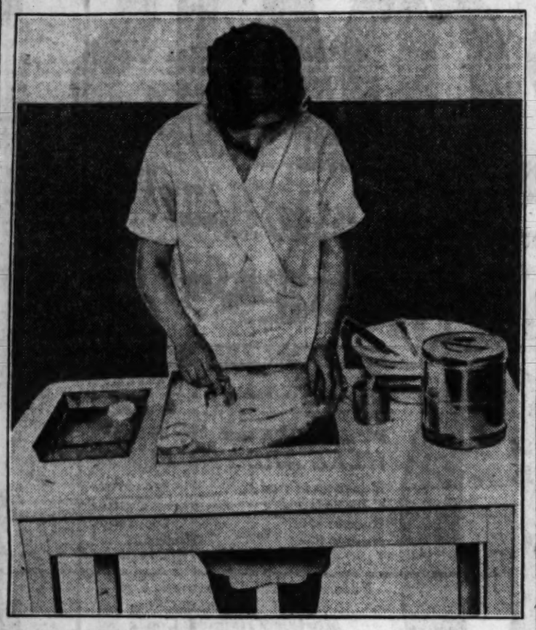
Ready to turn the soft biscuit dough onto a lightly floured board. Then the dough may be patted out with a lightly floured hand.



Cutting the biscuit dough.

Foreground, right: Modern type sifter. Sifter is in the middle. When all the flour falls through to the bottom the sifter may be reversed and the mixture resifted. This may be repeated as many times as one wishes without removing flour to another container.

Left: A lightly oiled pan for baking.

Right: Metal fork for stirring biscuits together. Spatula for removing all the dough from the mixing bowl.

Gaining Obedience

By Gladys Huntington Bevans

One Mother Tells Another How She Avoided Troubles of Discipline with Her Children.

LETTER from a self-made mother to her friend:

"Dear Sally: At last! It seemed as though the world had conspired against me when it came to answering your letter, but there is a lull and here goes.

"For once in my life I am free in the evening and not sleepy—wonder of wonders! I am too keyed up, I guess.

"I have just gotten Joan off to her first dance—and although I mean to be modern and pangless, I can't help having a little sinky feeling when I realize that my first born, looking like a crisp dewy flower, is off to her first dance. It makes me anything but sleepy and relaxed—though I'm tired enough physically. I have no maid, you know, and Joey has had an abscess in his ear and Phyllis chicken pox. They're all right now and tucked into bed and big Joe is out of town on a deal, so the evening stretches before me. It was this kind of time that I needed to answer your letter—it couldn't be scratched off between times what you wanted me to write about.

Finds Discipline Difficult.

"How have I managed to get such obedience from the three youngsters without scoldings and punishments? you say, and also that you never thought much of it until now, when David and Jane are giving you so much trouble. You say their reaction to at least 50 per cent of your commands is 'No'—and what obedience you do get is at the cost of your disposition and your fatal beauty—having found a cross and harassed face looking out at you from the mirror.

"You want me to be brutally frank and tell you what you do that is wrong. I can't very well, as we only see each other once in about six months. Suppose, instead, I look back to the time when my children were the age of yours, and see if I can remember some of the things I found pretty important in getting obedience.

"The first thing that hops into my mind is the fact that I never remember thinking much about obedience in the abstract—nor of using the word 'obey' to the children, either. I don't seem to remember making an issue of obeying — or anything like that. My aim used to be to try to get routine things done in the way that was pleasantest for the children—because you know, in themselves, a lot of the things they have to do are an awful bore—and if their parents are sort of dull and matter of fact about washing, and eating, and picking up, and toilet duties it adds to their tiresomeness.

Brightening Duties.

"For one thing, I didn't do any of this commanding stuff. Don't you simply hate to have any one order you around? It always makes me long to stick out my tongue and say 'I won't!' Usually I'd introduce the idea of coming to lunch or a bath or in from play in a casual way, with perhaps a 'please' or a 'let's' or 'it's time for this or that'—you know just about the way I'd approach a grown person who was—well, dear to me and familiar.

"I seldom met with any real resistance. If I did, a little explaining, or allowing a little extra time, or giving a little glamor to the next thing that was coming would smooth it away.

"That's rather a point, that last one—making the next thing they're to do seem pleasant. You know how it is with yourself—if you're doing something quite fascinating to you, like playing the piano or reading, you certainly wouldn't feel as responsive if some one said, 'come on and peel the onions,' as you would if they said, 'come on—the taxi's waiting for us to go to the theater.'

"When children are big it's a little different—they have usually formed some habits so that they go through certain expected motions easily. But when they're little, and the world is so new, and they experience this tremendous absorption in each thing they're doing, if the next thing ahead is a routine matter it needs to be invested with a little interest or pleasantness. Washing a pair of chubby hands or picking up toys can be fun or a game for a small boy or girl—or it can be a dull, businesslike affair, which they rebel heartily against, depending upon what kind of parents they have.

Give Them Warning.

"Another thing that I remember I always tried to do was this—if Joey, for instance, was playing joyously or intensely and I had to call him for a meal or a bath or an outing I always tried to give him time—for example, 'It will soon be time for supper, Joey, you'll have just time to drive in that load of hay.' Then in a few minutes I'd call him and that time he was expected to come—and he would, willingly.

"It isn't fair to snatch children from absorbing occupations or expect instantaneous obedience from them, except on special occasions, and then you can usually get it, when you need it.

"Besides giving the children time to obey a request, I made it a point to reduce the number of things I asked of them to a minimum. I tried to show them as much consideration in interrupting their play as I would have shown in interrupting big Joe, or my sister. I never scattered commands right and left.

"But one thing I did do. If I expressed a definite request for them to do something I made it absolutely explicit—and then I made sure it got done. I didn't forget it—or let it slide one time of it was too much trouble for me to insist, and then be stern the next.

"And I'd try to give reasons or explanations when I could. If Joan said, 'Why?' when I asked her to stop play I'd say perhaps, 'Because daddy will be home soon and we'll have just time to wash before he gets here—and I need very badly to have some one help me get supper.' I'd give some very direct, sensible explanation if I possibly could. Frequent, unexplained commands might easily make a child think of you as a tyrant who liked interrupting and giving orders.

Ignore a "No."

"Then, too, my voice usually took it for granted that what I asked would be complied with. And if I got one of those noes that so many parents dread, often I'd just ignore it—and there in a minute would be Joey and Joan doing the very thing they had said no to. Often that 'No' from little children only means 'wait a minute.'

"Well, my pen is running away with me. . . . I think those are the salients in this obedience business. Naturally, when children get a little older you vary your technic a little—some requests need no sugar coating, others may need more serious explanation. But the underlying principles are the same. To sum them up—courtesy, consideration, friendliness, firmness, evenness, persistence, and that everlasting ally in all human relations—tact.

"You know what the desperate bachelor tactfully said when he looked at his friends' little red, wrinkled, new baby, 'Well, that is a baby!' Well, this is a letter. Have I thrown even a gleam of light on the subject of obedience? I should have, after all these years. If you feel that I have garnered any other material wisdom don't hesitate to draw on it.

"I elieve the old overworked Sandman is coming to me. I'll sleep here till Joan comes in.

"With love to you all,

"Your old friend, MOLLY."

Sour Cream Cake.

The next time the cream sours try this cake, which time and again has been voted the best chocolate cake. It contains no shortening other than the cream, hence beats up easily and is light.

Bring two squares of bitter chocolate to the boiling point in ½ cup water. Let cool. Beat two eggs thoroughly and add 1 cup sugar, ½ cup thick sour cream, 1 teaspoon soda dissolved in the cream, 1 cup flour mixed with 1 teaspoon baking powder and a pinch of salt.

Add chocolate paste and beat thoroughly. Flavor with vanilla. This makes a small loaf or two layers. Use fudge frosting. L. G.

Melon Cocktail.

Use 24 watermelon balls 1 inch in diameter, 24 cantaloupe balls 1 inch in diameter, 2 cups of red raspberries, 2 cups of diced pears and 1 cup sugar. Combine and chill. B. W.

Barley Water.

Use two ounces of pearl barley, one thin strip lemon peel, and one pint of boiling water. Blanch the barley by bringing it to a boil in a little water. This cleanses it and keeps it a clear color. Strain off the water, put the barley and lemon peel in a jug, and pour the boiling water over them. Cover closely, and strain when cold. Add the juice of a lemon if desired.

This is a most wholesome drink for young and old and makes a refreshing and satisfactory drink. G. S.

Chicken and Corn Fritters.

Clean and disjoint a frying chicken. Dust with salt and pepper, roll in flour and fry until brown in fat, in a frying pan, with a minced onion added. When browned, add a cupful of water, cover and simmer until chicken is tender.

Remove chicken, add one tablespoonful of flour to the fat and one cupful of light cream. Stir until it boils and season with salt and pepper. Arrange the chicken on buttered toast, pour the gravy around and serve with corn fritters.

Corn Fritters—Two cups canned corn, one egg well beaten, pinch of salt, few grains paprika. Combine corn with egg and seasonings. Drop by spoonfuls into hot fat and fry on both sides until brown. -J.-M.

Women the World Over

Women are becoming greatly interested in the preservation of wild flowers and also in the reforestation of the United States. In almost every state some program of great scope is under way, and American women are playing an important part in bringing these conservation measures to a successful conclusion.

There are 1,150 women's institutes in the rural districts of the province of Ontario, with a membership of about 40,000. The institutes exist for promoting social contacts and whatever is beneficial to the community as a whole, especially to women and children, through coöperative effort.

According to Mrs. Oliva Johnson of St. Paul, Minn., president of the International Zonta Clubs, before women are able to compete with men in "big jobs" they must learn the art of loafing. Men holding good positions, she declares, are "perfectly helpless" without their secretaries.

Mrs. Sally Clark, wife of the assistant director of the American Museum of Natural History, brought down two black maned lions with a shot apiece at 80 yards on a recent trip to Africa. She organized her own safari of three trucks, a guide, a mechanic, and 14 natives. She is a skilled taxidermist and shoots for science rather than sport.

The highest paid woman in the service of the United States government is Miss Jessie Dell, a Democrat from Georgia. She is one of the $8,000 members of the civil service commission. Miss Dell was once a war department clerk.

A colossal statue to Elizabeth, queen of the Belgians, was recently unveiled at Eysden, a city between Liege and Maastricht, in memory of her untiring work in hospitals during the world war and for her efforts to relieve distress among the Belgian mining districts of Limbourg.

The Benefactor

By G. R. Malloch

in his dream, and always he found himself at the out-patients' door of this hospital, among the unhappy, tired women with sick children, the consumptive youths, the broken down laborers, the sad group he had seen waiting there.

And then some one like Sir Rollo came and looked at him and said in a sneering voice, pointing at the waiting people, "What do you know about that, eh?" And he answered indignantly, "I'm a millionaire!" And the sneering voice said, "That's why I asked you!"

Mr. Taladore smiled, a feeble little smile, lying there with his eyes closed. The whole thing was so simple! Why hadn't he understood it before? Was he of any particular use to the world, the world so largely made up of people like that? Not in the least! He simply took money and invested it—he was just a machine. Those hospital fellows could do it just as well and devote the proceeds to helping those suffering people.

He had a son, but his son had left him after all, Dick had a hundred a year to fall back on if he didn't prosper at painting. Dick had shown so plainly that he didn't want his father, didn't like his ideas about life, perhaps even didn't like him personally. Why not die and be done with it and let these fellows do all the good they knew how to with his money? It seemed so simple—all he had to do was to tell them about the will. Then a lot of people would be made well and happy. That was something. He fell asleep.

Nothing to Live For

Next morning Mr. Taladore's mind was still wandering. He realized dimly that he was being borne along endless corridors on some kind of wheeled couch; then he was in a big room full of nurses and men in white. He felt himself being lifted; he was lying on his back; a man was doing funny things with a strange affair—ah, they were going to give him an anesthetic! Now he must speak before it was too late or they would save him. If he got better he might forget all about the vision and the poor people and that would never do.

He made a desperate sign to the face of Sir Rollo. Then the face bent over him, grave and troubled, but nevertheless strong and somehow comforting.

"I wanted to tell you," he gasped. "I'm Taladore — the millionaire, you know."

"By jove," said Sir Rollo softly. "Well, we're doing our best for you, Mr. Taladore."

"Yes, I know. But look here—I made a will recently leaving most of my money to you for this hospital."

Sir Rollo's expression changed a little. He nodded.

"And you're worrying about that joke of mine, are you? Don't be a fool, Mr. Taladore."

"No, no. It's not that. But d'ye see, I don't want to live, I'll do no good if I live, in fact I've nothing to live for. So I just thought I'd tell you. I made the will in a fit of anger, and if I get better I may alter it, see?"

"I see."

"Well," said Mr. Taladore, with a smile of infantile cunning, "I thought it'd be a good chance for the poor—the people I saw on my way here."

"And what about your son, eh?"

"He doesn't like me. I've nothing to live for at all, really."

"Your best plan is to get better and give us a bit of money, Mr. Taladore. Now, no more talking—we're going to put you to sleep."

While the anæsthetist was doing his work, Sir Rollo's assistant turned to him with a smile.

"So it's come true after all—about the millionaire, I mean."

Sir Rollo cleared his throat noisily.

Next Sunday

At noon each day the chimes of Grace Church ring out clear and loud over Broadway. . . . Canby Chambers tells what effect they had on the lives of a boy and girl who listened to them in

Noon Chimes

"It has," he said grimly, "and if you make any slip in this business I'll have to accuse you of murder."

They set to work.

When Mr. Taladore awoke he was lying in bed in a private ward. He blinked, accustoming himself to the light; there seemed to be a lot of people in the room. He had a blessed consciousness of freedom, from pain. For a moment he thought he must be dead, and then he saw glimmering before him the face of his nurse, and then another face, the face of his son, and then another, the face of a pretty young girl. He saw the nurse nod to somebody and disappear. Then he realized that it was Dick who was gripping his hand.

In His Right Mind

"Hullo, dad!" said Dick, in a gruff sort of voice.

"Hullo Dick," whispered Mr. Taladore, feeling somehow very happy. "How did you get here?"

"Sir Rollo came and fetched in his car."

"Sir Rollo!"

"Yes. Hear you've had rather a bad passage—but you're all right now, he says."

"Nice of you to come, Dick."

"Wandering again," said Dick, still more gruffly, his face turning very red. "Seems you've been wandering in your mind a bit."

"I?"

"Yes, you," said Dick as he turned away and walked over to the window. "Said your son didn't care—didn't like you!"

Mr. Taladore lay silent for a moment, savoring the exquisite joy of this. "Who is that very pretty young lady sitting there—or am I still wandering in my mind, Dick?"

"That's Julia—my wife," snapped Dick at the window pane.

"Come here, my dear, and let me look at you," said Mr. Taladore, and holding her hand he looked up at his son's wife. He had forgotten all about his prejudices or if he recalled them it was only to think what a fool he had been.

"Thank you, my dear," he said, relinquishing her hand. "I'm very glad to meet you at last. Only—only you two, I suppose?"

"Kid's at home," growled Dick at the window. Then he swung around with a broad grin. "By jove, sir, he's the finest little chap in the world."

Then the nurse came in and drove them out and made her patient compose himself to sleep.

Next morning Sir Rollo came into the room accompanied by Mr. Taladore's solicitor.

"What are you doing here?" asked Mr. Taladore.

"Sir Rollo tells me you want to make a new will."

"And how does he know that, I wonder?"

"Any fool could tell that," said Sir Rollo. He turned to the lawyer with a grin. "He's strong enough—better take it down while he's in his right mind."

"Very well," said the lawyer, who was an old friend, as he sat down and opened his bag. "I hope you're not trying any undue influence—it seems to me you've got the man at your mercy."

"I want," said Mr. Taladore presently, "to cancel my present will and leave everything to my son Dick."

"Lucky chap!" said the lawyer. "Two or three million is it?"

"No, it won't be so much," said Mr. Taladore. "He's only to get what's left after I've made a deed of gift to Sir Rollo for his damned hospital—one million pounds, to be paid over as soon as you can fix it."

"Eh—what?" said his friend. "That's a big sum!" He turned to Sir Rollo. "Now, is he in his right mind or is he wandering again?"

"Emphatically in his right mind," said Sir Rollo.

Rebellious Zara Has Bowed to Many Masters

And Underground Struggle Still Goes On.

[This is the second of a series of articles on Italy's conquered provinces and the Adriatic problem by a Tribune correspondent who has just completed a two thousand mile trip along the Dalmatian coast and through Italian Tyrol.]

ZARA, Dalmatia.—[Special correspondence.]—Zara has no strategic value, Italians admit, and under normal conditions could not be held for two hours after declaration of war. It is, however, predominantly Italian and, besides representing prestige, acts as Irredentism's sentinel on the coast of Dalmatia.

Italy's claims to Zara and all Dalmatia are historic; it was once part of Venetian republic; strategic; islands are excellent naval bases, and ethnic; many Italians live in coast cities, and besides it would be a natural place for Italy's overpopulation to expand. Jugo-Slavia's claims are that Dalmatia is overwhelmingly Slav as a whole and that it is an economic and political integrity with the rest of the Jugo-Slav kingdom. With the exception of Zara, this contention was supported by Wilson at the peace conference.

The Italian thesis is that Dalmatia got into Austrian hands at the time of the Napoleon wars. It was taken from Venice and given to Austria. The Italians maintained, therefore, that when Venice was unified again with the Italian kingdom in 1866 all the Venetian possessions such as Dalmatia should have come back, too. But Dalmatia, like the Trento and Trieste, Julia and Istria, remained in Austrian hands and was left over to become a problem of the great war in Italian Irredentism aspirations.

A Political Monstrosity.

By the secret pact of London, preceding Italy's entrance into the war, Italy would have got about two-thirds of Dalmatia as far south as Trau; the rest of southern Dalmatia was to be an outlet for Serbia and Montenegro. Italian troops occupied the part assigned to Italy after the armistice and for two years there was a deadlock, until the matter was finally settled by the treaty of Rapallo, which Italy abandoning all except Zara and four small islands, but getting a good strategic frontier along the Julian Alps, farther north, securing the Fiume became a free city, and later obtaining that city also. Officially the struggle was dropped, but Fascism, which was organized to exploit Italy's war victory, has never approved the treaty's relinquishing Dalmatia, and keeps the subject constantly agitated. Moreover, at the time of the negotiations, Italian opinion was divided. Military opinion opposed annexation on the grounds that its defense would require a large armed force cut off from the rest of Italy. Naval opinion wanted it because of its well sheltered harbors protected by islands.

When Italy finally officially waived her rights, that left Zara, a little city of 12,000 people, including 3,000 Slavs, cut off from the peninsula and buried within Jugo-Slavia behind the islands fringes. Three per cent of the rest of the coast [the Slavs claim even less] was ethnically Italian.

Zara, with its tiny hinterland of forty square miles containing thirty small villages, and its Albanian settlers, became a sort of political and economic monstrosity, like San Marino, Andorra, or the Vatican city. It was not self sufficing economically but depended on the Jugo-Slav hinterland for much of its food. Its nearest railway connection is fifty miles distant in Jugo-Slavia, at Gracac; its steamer connection with Ancona and Fiume and Spalato consists in three services a week.

As such it exists today with 9,000 Italians and its 3,000 Slavs, and it looks as much like Italy as Venice.

Where Living Is Cheap.

Zara is clean and quiet; it has a good climate, a good water supply, electricity and drainage. It has two theaters, two hotels, bathing establishments, coffee houses, a law court, a bishopric, a grammar school, a technical school, a boys' and girls' college, twenty physicians, seven drug stores, one hospital, a wireless station, seven banks, and two motor garages.

S. A. I. M., the Puglia, the San Marco and the Jadranska Plovda steamers stop at its port. It is the seat of a manufacture. Its principal local industry, besides making cherry brandy, sugar and cigaret making, and a tunny and fish net factory. A new chocolate factory is in progress. The Italian government makes great efforts to keep the city flourishing, and all the Fascist paraphernalia of Ballilas and Avantguardisti exist here.

Depolavoro and the Fascist party are organized as on the mainland, and a battalion of the 9th Bersaglieri is quartered in Zara.

Being a free port, living is cheap. You can smoke and drink almost for nothing. Sugar and coffee and tobacco and salt come in free of duty. This gives also a big fillip to the smuggling industry, which, I was told, flourishes in Zara, the stuff being shipped over the Jugo-Slav frontier and landed down the coast at obscure points after dark in boats. A liter of wine costs 70 cents and a good one may be had for 55 to 60 cents. Local alcohol costs about 20 cents a quart, whisky gets in tariff free and costs only $1.03 a quart, cognac 80 cents a quart, and the home grown liqueurs between 40 and 60 cents a quart. Manufactured goods are equally cheap. However, the town has to import much of its food staples from Slava.

Seven Film Hits on Broadway While Theater Feels Inertia

By Tom Pettey.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—There are seven talkie hits on Broadway and the flesh and blood theatrical season is still suffering from inertia. One scans the flaming electric signs of Longacre Square and finds Mr. Talkie is providing the illumination as well as the shows. This is a movie year on Broadway and the crowd that polishes off its sidewalks is looking for its amusement in the cinema houses where a dollar goes a long way.

A glance into the future indicates that the talkie is going to give old lady legitimate a tussle between now and the time the first snow flies. No matter what the theater sets up—and there will be some real shows—the movie houses have every prospect of a big business.

Lots of New Ones Ahead.

There now is on hand Eddie Cantor's first full length, all color talkie, "Whoopee." It will arrive with a bang in a couple of weeks, and at popular prices, too. United Artists are getting Gloria Swanson's "What a Widow" ready for its premier. Three songs composed by Vincent Youmans will make that film a hit. Chester Morris is due before long in a thriller called "The Bat Whispers." Not even the camera men know the secret at its end.

"Billy the Kid," from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, is a King Vidor picture. They say it is an epic of old time banditry. "The Big Trail" is on the way from the Fox factory, and Beatrice Lillie will be seen in "Are You There."

"The Little Café" will be Paramount's next contribution. Maurice Chevalier will play the part of a singing waiter. "The Royal Family" will follow with Ina Claire playing an important part. Pathe will offer "Rebound" with Ann Harding, and Universal is sending along "Dracula," a creepy bit of mystery.

Gravitating Eastward.

Maybe we are mistaken, but it looks as if Paramount is centering its interest in its big and ever growing workshop out on Long Island. Stars are popping off trains every day and taxi-cabbing out to Astoria to go to work on feature productions, and the best directors in the business are being forwarded from the west coast.

Ruth Chatterton, Clara Bow and Claudette Colbert are due any day now to begin work at Astoria, and Hector Turnbull, Paramount's associate producer who recently was shifted east, already is on the job. Dorothy Arzner, Hollywood's lone woman director, has quit the orange groves and is in New York to direct the picture in which Claudette Colbert will be featured as soon as she gets home from her travels.

"The Royal Family" is all set for the cameras, with Frank Conroy as the last addition. Cyril Gardner will direct.

Irene Bordoni, the French stage star, is spending her afternoons at Astoria. She is making a musical short to follow her latest talkie, the technicolor version of "Paris."

There is an unusual amount of activity in the Brooklyn studios of Warner brothers. It is at this chatter factory that the "Vitaphone Varieties" are manufactured in wholesale lots. Dan Healy, the funny man, with Dollar Gilbert as his leading lady, have just completed "The Unfair Sex," while "Sweet Sixty," featuring Thomas W. Ross of stage fame, is on the fire.

Huge Studio at Astoria.

The talkie plant that Paramount has built at Astoria is larger than anything in the movie line that New York has had in the past. There are three great stages and a big back yard, making it possible to have four films in the making at one time.

All of which means that the predictions made in this column more than a year ago are coming true. There has been a gradual trend toward the east coast for production ever since the talkie was born. The Wall street break and its consequent reflection in motion picture financial circles held back for a time any major developments on either the west or east coast, as far as building new production units was concerned. Then the fatal Pathe film fire here did not help speed eastern production.

Things are moving faster now and the producers are finding New York the best bet for interior shots and most of the talkie picture making is done under roofs. Eventually most of it will be done under New York and Long Island roofs.

Paid for Boosting His Show.

Eddie Cantor will get paid $7,000 by the Associated Jewelers for twenty minutes on the air in a national radio hookup on the night of Sept. 28. "Whoopee," the Cantor technicolor musical, will hit the screen the night

"OUTSIDE THE LAW."

Produced by Universal. Directed by Tod Browning. Presented at the Palace theater.

THE CAST.

Connie	Mary Nolan
The Cobra	Edward S. Robinson
Fingers O'Neil	Owen Moore
Jake	Edward Sturgess
Humpy	John George
The Kid	Elmer Watson
Police captain	De Witt Jennings
Officer O'Riley	Rockliffe Fellowes
District Attorney	Frank Burke

By Roberta Nangle.

THOSE persons who can't let a month go by without seeing a crook picture will find what they're looking for at the Palace this week. "Outside the Law" was a thriller several years ago, with Lon Chaney and Priscilla Dean in the principal rôles. Acting on the theory that age cannot wither a good boxoffice story, Universal has resurrected the old piece and embellished it with sound effects.

The plot runs true to form, with a master crook, a debonair racketeer, a beautiful girl, and all the other characters that go to form the familiar pattern of an underworld story. The only sign of the picture's age is a bit of syrupy. "A little child shall lead them" hokum, which, I am sure, would have been omitted from a story written in this more realistic day. The little child is awfully sweet, however, so it isn't fair to complain about the rôle he's been given.

Impersonates a Dummy.

Before the first reel has flickered more than a few feet the audience sees its old friend, Owen Moore, impersonating a dummy in a bank window. His job, it seems, is to educate the sidewalk crowds by pointing with stiff mechanical precision to revolving slides exhibiting the bank's special saving account and mortgage and bond offers.

A little fellow with Oriental features squeezes his way through the crowds to the window, fixes a threatening eye on the window entertainer and with a piece of chalk, scratches on the glass, "Hello, Fingers." The "dummy" gives no sign of recognition.

Have you guessed already what it's all about? Well, it won't be long now. That very evening Mr. Moore [I don't want to call him the "dummy" again] calls on the little gentleman who saluted him at the window.

The latter, we learn, is the big boss of the underworld, known to his intimates as the Cobra. "Hello, Fingers," sez he to Mr. Moore. "You thought I wouldn't catch on to your racket in the bank, huh?"

"What about it?" says Fingers with a bright smile.

"What if you should get locked in by mistake some night?" suggests the Cobra. "I'm the boss of this town and any guy that wants to pull a job has got to split fifty-fifty with me."

Where the Fun Begins.

That, my friends, is the situation. Fingers does, indeed, plan to rob that bank some fine night; he hasn't been sitting in that window every day for his health. But does he want to share his loot with the little Cobra? He does not, and that's where the fun begins.

Fingers has a feminine partner in the little job he's working on. [According to the movies, even the very best crooks need help from a woman, every now and then.] This girl, Connie, is in on the deal because she wants money—wants a lot of money in a hurry. She is a lovely, though mucn peroxided blonde, with a come hither look and courage enough to take a chance.

Fingers Gets the Loot.

Connie sets out to bamboozle the Cobra into thinking that Fingers will meet his terms. Fingers meanwhile is extracting half a million dollars from the bank vaults. Connie doesn't succeed in fooling the Cobra, but Fingers gets away with the money.

Fingers and his lady friend then hide away, awaiting a chance to get out of town without the interference of the police or Cobra. They don't, but in the end, they don't want to get away. They reform, as all nice crooks should in the movies.

I shan't give away the events that lead up to their reformation and potential status as respectable citizens. The balance of the plot is exciting, though somewhat far fetched, and the finale is as satisfactory as could be expected.

Cast Does Fine Work.

The cast does fine work under Tod Browning's direction. Owen Moore is so likable as Fingers that you can't help rooting for him, even if he is outside the laws made for the protection of property. Mary Nolan, except for a few moments when she seems to lose hold on her characterization, is a plausible lady of the underworld.

As for Elmer Watson, the child we referred to before, he's adorable. He's

Drama Tourists Find Salzburg Unforgettable

One Spot Where Opera and Drama Blend.

[Burns Mantle and his Drama league pilgrims are headed home. Forced to cut Beyreuth, they had extra time in Salzburg for the Reinhardt festival, and then pushed, or were pushed, on to Vienna, Prague, and Dresden, with varying experiences.]

By Burns Mantle.

DRESDEN, Germany, Late August.—[Special Correspondence.]—We had had our Oberammergau adventure and were heading for Beyreuth. Siegfried Wagner's death, by newspaper report, would not affect the festival there. We were primed and ready for "Parsifal" as the peak of our summer. And then came word that there were no more places in the opera house to be had by any except the extremely rich; that, though our reservations had been forwarded in June, the festival directors had been unable to fill them and that if we came to Beyreuth it would have to be at our own risk.

We were, in the language of your beloved Broadway, fit to be tied. We spoke our opinions of this and that, paying particular attention to certain continental touring agencies, and went into conference. . . . Palpably it would be silly to go on, decided a majority, to park ourselves in village cottages in Beyreuth, as you are forced to do, and stay there two days with nothing to hear but a language we did not understand and nothing to see but the outside of the opera house. . . . I think I should have gone on, but it is easier for me to hear opera than it is for these westerners, and they care less about adventures merely for the experiences they bring than I do. . . . So we phoned for a change of schedule that would permit us to add two days to our Salzburg visit and tried to resume thinking kindly of all the world.

Irritations of Traveling.

Thirty-eighth day. It is, I discover, the sum total of petty irritations that makes traveling in groups both exciting and trying. . . . The Beyreuth disappointment intensified all the other disappointments. . . . We were called again in Oberammergau at 6:30. . . . We had been awakened hours before by the faithful being summoned to early mass. . . . The natives were to give an extra performance on this Monday because there was an overflow of visitors in town . . . also because there still was a considerable number of local residents who had not seen the Passion Play. . . . Did I tell you that the villagers have a special rate for these special performances? . . . and seem to like them. . . . I have a feeling that if I lived in Oberammergau I could think of a lot of things I had rather do than attend the festival more than once or twice.

We were fairly crowded in the train back to Munich, and we had a bad

Chicago Stage Far Behind Its Usual Schedule

Many Premieres Delayed Until October.

By Charles Collins.

THE current excuse for the theater's September lethargy is: "It's a backward season—about four weeks behind schedule."

Maybe so. Perhaps the good old ship "Legit" is not pounding to pieces on the reef of Showman's Woe; perhaps it has been merely delayed, in passing through the doldrums of summer, by the adverse currents of economic depression and a shortage of of fuel [slow-burning play manuscripts] in the bunkers.

Therefore let's look forward to see how things will stand a month or more from today. On Sept. 21 the Great Northern will open with "Three Little Girls," an operetta of charm and distinction. The Adelphi has promised a throbbing drama called "Virtue's Bed" for Sept. 26—but word comes from the east that Equity, the actors' union, has squelched this venture because its managers wouldn't guarantee the cast's railroad fares back to New York. So "Virtue's Bed" should carry a question mark on the calendar.

The Apollo, which closed last night with the departure of the long-lived summer show, "Sisters of the Chorus," hopes to acquire "Young Sinners" on Sept. 28. But there is no certainty about the date, which has already been postponed several times. Katharine Cornell, one of the few first magnitude actresses who have resisted the glittering temptations of Hollywood, will bring "Dishonored Lady" to the Harris on Sept. 29—and in this case the announcement doesn't mean maybe.

The night of Oct. 6, however, must be double-starred. It will mark the beginning of the Theater Guild's program at the Blackstone with Bernard Shaw's latest philosophic conversation. "The Apple Cart," and also the opening of the Dramatic League's sessions at the Princess theater with the internationally popular French comedy, "Topaze." Why these organizations have arranged competitive premières when first-nighters have so many evenings to spare is one of the minor mysteries of the so-called show business.

White Hopes of Drama.

When the Guild and the League are offering new plays of able authorship, acted with high skill [you can count on it] at three and four weeks' intervals, the Chicago dramatic season may be considered as well under way. These two organizations [with occasional help from the Goodman] prevented the past playgoing year in Chicago from passing into history as an affair of shreds and patches.

The Goodman will swing into line on Oct. 14 with Edwin Justus Mayer's romantic comedy "The Firebrand," and the work of this repertory company should be watched attentively. A new administration will endeavor to improve upon the policy and achievements of the old régime; and the Goodman's subscribers [an organized audience which now totals 4,000 and aspires to 10,000] is alert to discover what will happen. As an art theater under the sponsorship of the Art institute the Goodman stands at the crossroads of its career. The decline of the "commercial" drama offers it an excellent opportunity for survival and expansion. The old system of theatrical affairs which for several generations has provided Chicago with an abundance of playgoing seems to be obsolescent; and in the future, one may suspect, the drama will exist only in cities that have enough of the metropolitan spirit to roll their own plays—i. e., produce and sponsor plays without dependence upon the "booking offices" of New York managers. Philadelphia rose to meet this emergency last spring with the now much talked about "Lysistrata," a classic Greek drama, over which Broadway is raving. Chicago must do likewise, at the Goodman or elsewhere, if the city is to maintain a better than provincial status in stage entertainment.

"It's a Wise Child," slated for the Erlanger Oct. 13 and "Sweet Adeline," for the Illinois Oct. 26, arouse pleasure by anticipation. The former play is a profitable feather in the old magician's cap of David Belasco; the latter is a musical comedy to which New York has given complete approval. After them, on Oct. 27, comes the deluge of Fritz Leiber's Shakespeare, at the Civic.

This survey reveals that by the end of October all of the downtown theaters will be accounted for except two—the Cort and the Majestic. It also suggests that in Chicago the theatrical season is two months, rather than four weeks, behind the usual schedule. A full crop of plays cannot be expected until the frost is on the pumpkin.

Nude or Naked?

"Flesh attractions" is a new phrase which has cropped up into shop talk of the theater. It means, of course, any actual, unreproduced form of entertainment—anything not a talkie or a movie. And the word has gone out among the showmen that the populace is clamoring for "flesh." Watchers at the sickbed of the legitimate stage are finding the message reassuring.

"Flesh" is coming back, the wise ones insist. Perhaps this accounts for the prevalence of exposed epidermis in "Artists and Models," the revue which has come to the Grand Opera house to cause something like a stampede of customers toward the box office. This show is comprehensive in its display of almost nude figurantes; and in two cases [discreetly posed] the undraping appears to be total.

This might bring up a question over which there has been much heated argument through the centuries. What is the difference between art's noble nudes and nature's nakedness? Why is the one beautiful and pure and the other a social embarrassment, a shock to decorum, and a carnal provocation?

Chicago Stage Far Behind Its Usual Schedule

Many Premieres Delayed Until October.

By Charles Collins.

This, however, is a dangerous subject for Sunday morning meditation, and I shall avoid it.

Of course, "Artists and Models" isn't art, except in the vaudeville sense of the word. Its undressed girls stand upon the stage, with glacial expressions upon faces far less praiseworthy than their bodies, merely to attract ticket buyers. And yet they are only a little more extreme, in their exposures, than last summer's "home girls" taking their suntans on the bathing beaches. . . . "Peep-show" is not the phrase for "Artists and Models." If you want to label it you might call it a "stare-show."

Flotsam and Jetsam.

The principal contenders for the freak title championship of the new theatrical season are "The Greeks Had a Word for It," by Zoe Akins, and "Canaries Sometimes Sing," by Frederick Lonsdale. Thus far there hasn't been an intimation that the authors are weakening in their insistence upon these fantastic labels.

Birds of a feather did a fine job of flocking last Thursday afternoon. "Lost Sheep" entertained Mae West's "Sex" company and the "Sisters of the Chorus" cast at a professional matinée.

After twenty-eight years in the so-called provinces, an actor named Kibbee has found himself a New York hit in the play called "Torch Song," with which Arthur Hopkins has pleased the Manhattan press. Which proves that theatrical managers, like baseball magnates, should organize an intelligence service among the minor leagues.

Bayard Veiller, author of "The Trial of Mary Dugan," and, farther back, a better play called "The Thirteenth Chair," is now represented on the New York stage with a play called "That's the Woman." It deals with a murdered notable, the finger-marked revolver of his best friend and the lady with whom that friend happened to be spending a cheerful hour when the foul deed occurred. Of course it contains a courtroom scene.

A stage statistician announces that Broadway will see 31 new plays in September and 41 in October. Maybe; but don't believe it until the playbills are pasted in your scrap book. . . . And Frank Gillmore, president of the Actors' Equity association, corrects a rumor that nearly all the small city and neighborhood stock companies have died out. He states that 71 of them will be in operation this month.

"Everybody's Secret" is now the title of the play which began life in Budapest as "The King's Forty-Horse-Power-Motor," and which the Dramatic League of Chicago announced as "The Girl in the News." The Hattons dramatized it; the Shuberts are staging it; Miriam Hopkins will act in it; and the Professional Players of Philadelphia will use it to start their subscription season.

"The Last Mile," announced for an early September opening at the Harris theater and canceled, cannot come to Chicago because New York audiences insist upon flocking to see it. This drama of prison riots has reached its eighth month at the Harris, New York, and on Sept. 22 will move to the Ambassador.

Drama Critic Dies.

William Smith Goldenberg, for seventeen years dramatic critic of the Cincinnati Enquirer, died Sept. 4 in that city after an illness of three months. When plays were scarce in Cincinnati it was Mr. Goldenberg's custom to come to Chicago for a round of the theaters, so he was well known here. He was one of the organizers of the Dramatic League of Cincinnati, a subscription organization affiliated with the Dramatic League of Chicago. His daughter is a member of the cast of "Death Takes a Holiday."

TWO IN A REVUE.

AILEEN STANLEY AND PHIL BAKER.

HERE are two of the featured personalities of "Artists and Models," the revue that has opened the new season at the Grand Opera house. They are veterans of several long Chicago runs. Miss Stanley leads the school of soft voiced singers of popular ditties; and Mr. Baker is the champion accordion squeezer of the American stage. Although pictured together, they do their acts singly.

Play Producing Speeds Up on New York Stage

Mummers from Moscow May Come for Tour.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—At this writing six new shows and one return engagement are on the books for the week beyond this, and practically all are productions of considerably more than average promise. Designated for Monday, Sept. 22, are "The Greeks Had a Word for It," the not so Greek Zoe Atkins play, which William Harris Jr. will make known at the Sam H. Harris theater; "Frankie and Johnnie," the play about the man who "done her wrong," which, the police permitting, will come to the Republic, and "Uncle Vanya," which Jed Harris will bring to the Booth for two weeks with Lillian Gish and nearly all of last spring's cast again in it.

Tuesday night, Sept. 25, will be given over to two important premieres—"Step-Daughter of War," Mr. Erskin's first production for the Frohman company, and "Fine and Dandy," the Joe Cook harlequinade, which Boston is finding pretty delirious. Wednesday night will bring the new George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart comedy, "Once in a Lifetime," which is all about the talking pictures, and then, on an evening yet to be determined, Lou Tellegen will resume his Broadway acting career in "Love Technique."

Lee Shubert, it now appears, may be interested with Sidney Ross in bringing Meyerhold and his company of Russian actors to New York this season. Preparations for the visit are going ahead on the part of Mr. Ross—he has written to request the necessary visés and to obtain the soviet government's permission for the troupe of thirty-five, in which Zinaida Reich, Meyerhold's wife, will be the principal player, to come here. Six plays, including "The Inspector General," which a lot of New Yorkers saw in Paris in the summer, will be in the repertory, and the plan is for an eight weeks' local season, followed by a tour.

Evelyn Laye and "Bitter Sweet" will begin a twenty weeks' road tour on Nov. 10 in Chicago. . . . Mr. Leslie's new "Blackbirds," now in Boston, seems to be meeting with favor. In five recent Brooklyn performances the Negro revue grossed more than $11,000, which in these precincts is regarded as good . . . Generally speaking, the burgeoning season's business on what remains of the road has been far below expectations.

Albany has been stricken from the list of cities which will see Ethel Barrymore, her daughter and "Scarlet Sister Mary" before they come to New York, and in its place Columbus, O., has been substituted. The play will open there on Sept. 25 and then go to Cleveland and Pittsburgh, as scheduled. . . . William Gillette is waiting to see if business and theatrical conditions improve this fall throughout the country before he decides about resuming his farewell tour in "Sherlock Holmes"—which, of course, means he will not start before late winter. The plan is to visit the places he did not touch last season.

Having directed a successful season of the St. Louis Municipal opera, Milton I. Shubert, nephew of the 44th street overlords, now plans to enter producing on his own. In bidding him farewell, the St. Louis papers report that he will bring forth at least one musical show on Broadway this season and that next he plans to become more active.

Herman Shumlin, who has been quiescent, as far as producing goes, since "The Last Mile," has acquired a German piece, "Hotel," or just possibly "Grand Hotel," and plans to open it at the National theater early in November without benefit of out of town performances. The author is a German woman, who is less than completely identified as having worked with Max Reinhardt, and her play is said to call for something scenically elaborate, Aline Bernstein will attend to that part of its presentation.

One who strolls in and out of the Broadway theaters reports that the reconverted Colony, now to be called the Broadway, will have 1,904 seats, 900 of them in the orchestra, when it starts upon its career as a musical comedy house. The process of altering the theater is nearing completion. It is expected that the new Goetz show, "The New Yorkers," will be the attraction to legitimatize the house.

"The Vanderbilt Revue," in the production of which Lew Fields and Lyle D. Andrews will join hands, will begin rehearsals tomorrow with the intention of opening in Philadelphia in another four weeks. Late news of the show is that Lulu McConnell and Nana Bryant will be among those involved in it; that there will be a thread of a story, and that its material, assembled from a number of sources, will include a Kenyon Nicholson sketch.

Plays by Pirandello.

J. J. Shubert, who recently returned from Europe, announced on his arrival that he had closed a contract with the distinguished Italian playwright, Luigi Pirandello, under the terms of which four of the latter's new plays will be produced in New York. Two of the works are already completed, and will be seen in New York this season. These are "Questa Sera Si Recita a Soggetto" [Tonight We Improvise] and "Come Tu Mi Vuoi" [As You Want Me]. The others, now being written, are "I Giganti della Montagna" [The Giants of the Mountains] and "Quando Si è Qualcuno" [When You Are Somebody].

B'way Openings

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—This seems more like it—seven premieres scheduled for the week, including some promising plays and two important musical shows. The latter includes Chicago's favorite operetta of last season, "Nina Rosa." The announcements:

"The Rhapsody"—Opens tomorrow night at the Cort theater. A play by Louis K. Anspacher, who has been heard from before, and the opening production of George M. Cohan's season. Louis Calhern will have the chief rôle, and the cast will also include Julia Hoyt, John R. Hamilton, Natalie Schafer, Craig Williams and John T. Doyle.

"With Privileges"—Opens tomorrow night at the Vanderbilt theater. A play by a newcomer, Ruth Welty. Chief among the performers will be Roy Hargrave, who had the leading rôle in last year's peripatetic "Houseparty."

"Symphony in Two Flats"—Opens Tuesday night at the Shubert theater. A play, acted in London last year, with and by Ivor Novello, who, according to the authorities, has never before appeared on the New York stage. Lillian Brathwaite and Benita Hume will be in the English company supporting Mr. Novello.

"Luana"—Opens Wednesday night at Hammerstein's theater. "The Bird of Paradise" set to music, specifically to the music of the melodious Rudolph Friml. Howard Emmett Rogers has adapted the hardy perennial to the uses of the song and dance stage, and J. Kiern Brennan has outfitted the tunes with words. Ruth Altman, new among the Times square thrushes, will be the prima donna of a company which will likewise contain Robert Chisholm, Jane and Whalen, Marguerita Sylvia, Arn Skelly, Joseph MacAulay, Robert Middlemass and Lillian Bond.

"Insult"—Opens tomorrow night at the Forty-ninth Street theater. The delayed premiere of a play from the Dutch of Jan Fabricius in an adaption made by a couple of Englishmen and played in London in the spring. Leslie Perrins, an actor new in these parts, will have the leading rôle.

"The Cinderrelative"—Opens Thursday night at the Comedy theater. Dorothea Chard will have the leading rôle in this one, which is set down as a comedy by Dorothy Heywood and Dorothy de Jagers.

"Nina Rosa"—Opens Saturday night at the Majestic theater. An operetta which has long been scheduled for Broadway will be the third Shubert opening of the week—"Insult" and "Symphony in Two Flats" being the other two. The Messrs. Harbach, Caesar and Romberg, an experienced trio, are responsible for such essentials to "Nina Rosa" as the book, lyrics, and music. The players will linclude Guy Robertson, Ethelind Terry, Armida, Leonard Ceeley and Don Bradley.

Vox Playgoer

To the Dramatic Editor:

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—Two years ago we organized in Rogers Park the Loyola Community theater. Its success has been phenomenal; last year we had close to fifteen hundred season members and our audience for the year totaled forty thousand. Last May one of our casts presented "Sun Up" in New York in competition with other amateur groups throughout the country and received exceptionally high praise.

We are setting forth on our third year with bright prospects and have arranged a notable program including plays, lectures, and a playwriting contest. The season will commence with what, no doubt, will be the first non-professional performance in this country of "Journey's End."

EMMET J. CLEARY.

Students Stay Home.

MANILA.—(AP)—Because government revenues have been reduced by business depression, the islands will send no government supported students abroad this year, although provision has been made for students already in the United States.

Who's Who in Current Plays; Theater News

"Topaze" to Bring Cast of Veteran Players.

AMONG the players who will appear with Frank Morgan and Catherine Willard in the cast of "Topaze," at the Princess, opening Oct. 6, are Harry Davenport, son of the famous E. L. Davenport and brother of that Fanny Davenport who in the '80s and '90s was the idol of American theater goers because of her acting in "Fedora," "La Tosca," and "Gismonda."; Hubert Druce, brought to this country by the late John Drew to act with him in J. M. Barrie's "The Will," and here ever since; Essex Dane, here as recently as last January in "The Infinite Shoeblack," wherein she acted the avaricious landlady; and Clarence Derwent, who has acted numerous rôles in Chicago since, in 1915, he first appeared here in support of Grace George in "Major Barbara" and "The Liars."

Aileen Stanley, the singing lady of "Artists and Models" and other revues, was a vaudeville performer until a phonograph company got her to make a record. It proved to be a "riot" upon the disk buyers, and from that time on Aileen's way with a song has been regarded as of major importance at the box offices.

She reached New York in 1925, via the Kit Kat Club of London, where her warbling is said to have pleased the prince of Wales. She has been a featured player in "Pleasure Bound" and "A Night in Spain"; Chicago enjoyed her for seventeen weeks in the latter show. Her last name, incidentally, is not Stanley, but Mugridge. Nora Bayes persuaded her to change it for professional purposes.

Reports from Toronto are that Ivor Novello and his company in "A Symphony in Two Flats," were unqualifiedly successful in their first performances on the American continent. The play was on view in the Ontario metropolis last week. "A Symphony in Two Flats" is one of the long run London plays imported for the uses of the Dramatic league and of the Professional Players. Mr. Novello and his English associates will, however, appear in the comedy in New York before it is offered in any of the theaters operated by either organization.

Later, it will be shown in Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, and Detroit. It is not in the prospectus for 1930-'31 of the Dramatic league of Chicago; but it is expected that the play will be given here either in a theater other than the Princess under the management of the Dramatic league or else in the Princess as a supplementary offering to the subscription season.

Harry McNaughton, who plays the British aristocrat out on a jamboree in "Lost Sheep" at the Selwyn, has ranged from Shakespeare to talking pictures in his stage career. His American start was made in "The Better 'Ole," a musical comedy based on Bruce Bairnsfather's war cartoons. Since then, whenever the drama or the lyric stage needed an English comedian, he has been active. Two "Passing Shows" and a "Ziegfeld Follies" are on his record.

Fran Lehar, composer of the world famous "Merry Widow," will be represented on the American stage this season with an operetta called "Land of Smiles." The Shuberts are staging it and intend to give the first performance in Newark, N. J., on Oct. 6. The cast will include Gladys Baxter, prima donna of "A Wonderful Night" last season; Barry Lupino, Jerry Goff, Fred Leslie, Marjorie Peterson, Howard Lang, and Marie Stoddard. Another operetta by Lehar, called "Frederica," was staged in London last Tuesday night. It deals with the early life of Goethe.

James Barton, one of the stars of "Artists and Models," at the Grand Opera house, comes of a stage family and took to "the profession" when a boy. He has appeared with burlesque shows, carnival troupes, stock companies, showboat outfits, ten-twenty-thirty repertory crews, and all the rest of it. He rose to attention in New York in some of the Winter Garden revues, was featured in "The Rose of Stamboul" and "The Last Waltz," and became a star in "Dew Drop Inn."

E. M. Newman will tell about his travels in Orchestra hall this season as usual. He announces "Seeing Europe" as his general subject; his special titles are "Seeing Italy," "Rome and Vatican City," "Oberammergau," "Switzerland" and "La Vie de Paris." His Chicago engagement [in Orchestra hall] will begin Oct. 15.

William A. Brady Jr. and Dwight Deere Wiman have dissolved the partnership of five years' standing, which resulted, among other productions, in "The Little Show" and its sequel, now on view in New York. Mr. Wiman will continue in the management of "The Second Little Show"; Mr. Brady Jr. will branch out for himself, although he has no plans that require immediate announcement.

FOUND IN "LOST SHEEP."

MISS SIDNEY FOX.

SHE is the ingenue "find" of the year. Every one who sees "Lost Sheep," the play now at the Selwyn theater, goes away talking about the lovely little lady who acts the preacher's youngest daughter. A year or so ago Miss Fox was merely a beginner who had wandered away from a stenographer's desk to try her luck on the stage. Now, whenever a producing manager is looking for an ingenue who hasn't been hardened by the age of jazz, he thinks of Sidney Fox and wishes he could engage her.

THE ARMCHAIR PLAYGOER

By Fanny Butcher.

TO the average reader Thornton Wilder's few words in the front of "The Woman of Andros" to the effect that the idea for the book had come to him from a lost play of Menander's which he knew through the "Andria" of Torrence meant little more than that there was once a Torrence and a Menander. Menander has been one of the great literary mysteries. For almost two thousand years the plays of Menander have been talked about and read about [after reading was possible], and written about. Contemporary comment called him the foremost Greek comedian. Scholars until 1905, however, had to build him up from his contemporaneous effect. Not even fragments of his plays were available.

THORNTON WILDER.

Then in 1905 a jar stuffed with them was found in Egypt. Piecing those scraps of papyrus together was a colossal task. If you remember, S. S. Van Dine had Philo Vance working on it at the beginning of both "The Bishop" and "The Scarab" murder cases. But now Philo Vance must find another esoteric occupation, for L. A. Post of Harvard university has accomplished the task, and his findings have been published in "Menander, Three Plays," which has been published by Dutton. Human loves and foibles make them tingle. They are moving drama as well as a brilliant literary treasure.

The rumor that Oliver La Farge's Pulitzer prize novel, "Laughing Boy," is soon to be produced on Broadway became a fact when David Belasco recently announced his acceptance of the dramatic version of it. The dramatization was made by Otis Chatfield-Taylor, the son of Hobart Chatfield-Taylor, formerly of our town.

The awards for the best full length drama, one act play, and religious play submitted in the 1929 Drama league-Longmans Green playwriting contest have been announced. The jury was composed of Hatcher Hughes, Kenyon Nicholson, Alexander Dean, and the New York Theater Guild. They have given the prize for the full length drama to Thomas P. Robinson for "Darick Clausen." Mr. Robinson, a former Boston architect, became interested in the theater through Professor Baker of the Harvard 47 workshop, for whom he designed stage scenery. Since then he has devoted himself to playwriting.

The Theater Guild holds the option for production of "Darick Clausen" and it will be published immediately by Longmans Green. To Elene Wilbur of California went the prize for her one act play, "The Table Set for Himself," which the American Academy of Dramatic Arts will present.

Dr. Norman L. Richardson, Prof. Harold A. Ehrensberger, and Mrs. A. Starr Best awarded the prize for the best religious play submitted to Sonia V. M. Daugherty of Connecticut for her "Esther." The play will be produced by the Pilgrim players of Evanston. These plays will also be published by Longmans Green. In coöperation with the American Classical league and the Drama league, Longmans Green will publish "The Mantuan" in commemoration of the 2000th anniversary of Virgil's birth.

Theater Guild

THE Theater Guild will stage "Roar, China," a Russian play, at the Martin Beck theater, New York, on or about Oct. 27. This will be its second production of the season, following "Elizabeth, the Queen," by Maxwell Anderson.

"Much Ado About Nothing," which is planned by the Guild for late November in New York with the Lunts heading the cast, will be staged and designed by Robert Edmond Jones. Further intelligence from the Guild is that Lynn Riggs' "Green Grow the Lilacs" is now on the midwinter lists. Two reasons are given for its postponement—first, that Mr. Riggs is at present too busy with Arthur Hopkins' "Roadside" to devote time to his other play, and second, that both the Guild's first production, "Elizabeth the Queen," and "Green Grow the Lilacs," although completely dissimilar in subject matter, come under the heading of domestic plays. Partly for variety's sake the schedule was switched.

As for the Guild's "The Garrick Gaieties," it will probably stay in New York a fortnight longer than expected, moving to the Martin Beck when it becomes necessary to surrender the Guild's stage to "Elizabeth the Queen." When the revue goes on tour it will be a composite of the three shows thus far presented under the "Gaieties" title and, just possibly, will contain such old favorites as the Messrs. Rodgers and Hart's "Manhattan" and "Mountain Greenery." At all events the Guild is trying to lure back into its fold for the tour some of the performers from the 1925-26 shows who are not in the present issue.

Riverview

THE twenty-seventh season for Riverview park will end today. As a final gesture, Riverview will entertain the county Democratic organization, headed by Anton Cermak and Clayton F. Smith, with the largest picnic of the year. It is estimated that upward of 100,000 people will attend. Former United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis, who is up again for election, will be one of the principal speakers. There will be prizes and fireworks.

The night will also mark the end of Riverview's eighteenth annual Mardi Gras carnival. The masqueraders will gather in the Woodland prizes will be awarded to the weekly and nightly prizes. Then the grand prizes will be awarded to the weekly winners.

Music Gains Recruits.

BUDAPEST.—(AP)—Minstrels have been added to the army recruiting parties which visit Hungary's villages and try to enlist enough youths to fill up the army of 35,000 men allowed by the peace treaties. The music is supposed to stir the youths' patriotic spirit.

We sat around before a table in the open air, talking a polyglot assortment of languages. All talked Italian and Croat, a couple of people talked English, most of them talked German, and a few talked French. The common coinage, however, was Croat. Presently a big smoked ham was brought in and served sliced with the blackish red wine of the country. The wine crop this year had been good. What was looking bad in the country was water. They hoped new irrigation projects would remedy this defect.

A Scene on Sunday.

There is no railroad connecting one end of Dalmatia with the other. That was one of the ruses of Austrian empire policy to keep the coast undeveloped and undesirable to aggressive neighbors. There are, however, fairly good roads down the coast between the rocky island fringe and the black Dinaric Alps farther inland.

I got a car from a Zaratini named Meskovich. Meskovich is Croat by blood, but he is now Italian. He drove me down to the Albanian quarter, where he got an Albanian chauffeur who worked for him to drive me to Sebenico and Spalato.

Zara's hinterland extends in a sort of inverted wedge shape back into the Jugo-Slav hinterland. The Slavs say it is an Italian button on the Slav coat tail. It is about twelve miles in width at the end and about five miles in depth. Some of the land seemed to have patches of garden, but most of it was arid and rocky. In ten minutes we were at the frontier, where the flags of Italy and Jugo-Slavia were flying. The Italian carabinieri on one side examined and stamped my passport and then gave it to the Jugo-Slav police to stamp and then we went on down the road toward Sebenico. On the left was the glowering ridge of the Dalmatian mountains in a blue mist and on the other side the sea. Sometimes we turned an angle in the road which gave a magnificent view of mountain, sea, and the rocky islands lying along the littoral.

The country was sparsely settled, and sprinkled with villages here and there. Peasants were going along the road to church. It was Pentecostal Sunday. They were wearing their regional dress and many were riding donkeys, that shied at the automobile. The men were tallish and strong looking, of Croat type, with pyramid shaped heads and long noses. They wore black and orange colored caps and brocaded vests. The women wore shawls over their heads.

A Hidden Hangar.

We passed Sebenico and its harbor, cuddled behind the islands, and crossed a pontoon bridge over a long island estuary and then, climbing some mountains over a winding road for an hour, reached a crest whence we could see Trau and Spalato in the distance, with the mountains in the background and the sea and islands in front.

Between Trau and Spalato there is an aviation center, with several hangars for hydroplanes. The location was excellent for the take off on the smooth inland channel and hidden from the main Adriatic by the islands. Later on we passed a cement factory which is one of the locality's chief industries. Italians have capital in it. Then we circled around and came to Spalato, or Split, as the Jugo-Slavs call it, a pretty seaport town with fine harbor and much new building interspersed with old Roman remains such as the ruins of Diocletian's palace. American warships were once anchored in this harbor to keep order while vexing frontier problems were being decided by Mr. Wilson and the Paris peace makers.

Many Italian and Jugo-Slav ships were tied up in the harbor and along the seafront were many Viennese appearing cafés where bands and orchestras were playing music.

Besides its coastwise trade, Split is connected with Zagreb, the Croat capital, by railroad, and is a favorite seaside resort—though not so much as Ragusa, farther down—with Jugo-Slavs, Germans, Hungarians and Czecho-Slovaks, the former members of the Austrian empire. The season this year has been especially good for the local business that depends on tourist traffic.

In the restaurants and hotels the menu was invariably printed in both Slav and German, because of the number of German speaking tourists, I was told. Most all the shopkeepers could speak German, possibly Italian, too, but they did not seem to want to speak that. Nearly everyone seemed to have a relative in America, and many in Chicago, and all wanted to tell about it. Emigration from this section of Croatia was heavy before the immigration restriction bill.

The Sunday afternoon was hot and those people who were not sitting on the café terraces listening to the music seemed to be down at the bathing beach at the southern end of town.

Too Much Celebration.

We started back for Zara later. It is best not to motor along the Dalmatian coast. The peasants and the domestic animals along the roads are not yet accustomed to traffic regulations. The last time I was in Albania the chauffeur ran over a calf in the forest just below Scutari, which lead to interesting complications with armed mountain shepherds.

This afternoon a Croat peasant was walking along the road ahead of us. He had been to a Sunday afternoon celebration in a neighboring village. The driver honked, but the man, instead of stepping off left, ran right, and directly in front of the car. The driver ditched the car and almost hit a telephone pole trying to avoid him, but the left wheel of the car hit the man, knocking him down, and the man's hand was thrown against the windshield, inflicting a couple of bad cuts. He fell in the road. The Albanian driver started crying, thinking he had killed the man. Other peasants gathered around and heaped imprecations on the driver, not knowing the cause of the accident. We took the man back to Trau, where a doctor dressed the two cuts on his hand. Then we took him on to the hospital in Split.

The captain of the Trau gendarmes went with us and we were placed as unofficially and politely under arrest as possible. The man was all right by the time we got back to Split, and the gendarm captain explained that he had been drinking with a party of friends because it was Pentecostal Sunday.

It would have been all right except for the fact that the owner of the car was Mesconvitch, back in Italian Zara, and the chauffeur was also Italian legally, and had we gone back to Zara across the frontier it would have been difficult for the Jugo-Slavs to collect whatever insurance damages were due. So the police held the chauffeur and car as hostage for the damages and after I wrote out a long deposition about the accident they told me I could go. I went up to see the Italian consul to intercede for the driver. He said it was not in his line and he could not be bothered by it, even when I told him the driver was a good Italian citizen.

At midnight I caught a coastwise steamer, which landed me in Zara at 6 o'clock in the morning.

Black and White Is Color Enough for Movie Fans

Pictures a la Natural Fail to "Go Over."

By Rosalind Shaffer.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Sept. 13.—[Special Correspondence.]—One those kaleidoscopic changes in popularity that fills the Hollywood annals is the current lot of the color process picture.

A year ago the process of Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, Boston engineer-inventor, which is known as technicolor, was something for which the competing studios, unable to obtain color cameras, fought wildly. The fortunes of the Kalmus family and business associates skyrocketed even beyond the dreams of the originator. Technicolor stock, which had been cheap, was mounting. Other color process backers strained every energy to get their devices into production.

Warner Bros. held control of the technicolor process under a year's lease and other companies were obliged to rent the precious cameras at night, after Warners' daytime schedule was completed. On every side studios signed up technicolor contracts for the following year, eager to get a place in the sun of color photography, which seemed, after sound, to promise the biggest sensation in films.

But things changed. In recent weeks a United Artists official instigated a questionnaire sent out by an exhibitors' paper to 6,800 motion picture theater owners. The purport of the questionnaire was to determine the popularity of color photography with their audiences.

9,000 Exhibitors Reply.

The question evidently was one on which exhibitors felt strongly, for many who did not receive questionnaires wrote in. Nine thousand replies were received.

The summary seems to be that color photography is not nearly so popular with audiences as the film audiences anticipated. In fact, a proportion of the replies show that theater patrons went to the trouble of asking if pictures were to be in color or in black and white. When told, they expressed preference for black and white.

This condition has made the exhibitors wary of color pictures. Many ask to be allowed to retain black and white pictures even if they must pay the contracted extra charge for color.

That color has a big future in pictures is not doubted by the producers. The difficulty seems to be in perfecting and improving the inventions now available and in securing others as they are offered the movie market.

One method now under option to Howard Hughes is a considerable simplification of technicolor, though there is no way of telling so far if it is as satisfactory in result. The new method is to take the pictures without special makeup, or lights, or cameras, or technicians, with a simple shutter attachment on the camera and a special shutter on the projection machine. It is known as multicolor.

The great success of technicolor before the complication of sound entered vouches for the public interest in color as such. It only remains to pefect it and remove some of the objections stated with such vehemence by those interested.

Fiesta Is Inaugurated.

The inauguration of Los Angeles' Fiesta went off with a bang. It was amazingly popular and attracted a big crowd of the Hollywood folks to the old Spanish plaza and Olivera street, where the old Spanish houses and buildings, which fast were being destroyed before the march of commerce and city growth, are being revived and used as eating places and studios for book shops, curio shops, interior decorators' shops and tea shops.

Street musicians and dancers in Spanish costumes and quaint sidewalk merchants gave sophisticated Hollywood a real thrill.

Monkey Business.

One of the hot numbers that the public will see in "Just Imagine," the De Sylva-Brown-Henderson special at Fox, is a chorus of girls dressed as monkeys, who do a most engaging dance number after emerging from the boughs of huge futuristic trees. It is supposed to be part of the entertainment offered to visitors to Mars in 1930. Ivan Linow, strong man of the films, impersonates Mars. El Brendel in a coat with no collar or lapels contributes a share to the monkey business. He is the star.

Casualties Expensive.

Film casualties are becoming expensive to the studios. Following the death of Harry Wells, a 30 year old studio worker, on one of the sets for "Dirigible," a Columbia picture, by falling from a balloon hangar roof, a coroner's jury returned a verdict that death resulted from negligence of the Columbia company. On the heels of this legal slap Frederick Keifer, a cameraman, filed a $50,000 damage suit against Columbia Pictures corporation, claiming that personal injuries he received on a circus set were unnecessary and resulted from negligence.

Good Tree Sitting Before It Became American Pastime

LAKE BALATON, Hungary.—(AP)—A tree sitter who could give cards and spades to the juveniles of America haunts the Gergely valley, a few miles from this resort.

Years ago he was Isaac Czinner, a wood cutter. Now he is "Jackie," bare except for a scant piece of burlap, with hair and beard matted and skin burned by sun and wind.

He came at the call of a game keeper, gnawing on a bird which he had killed with a stone, but ran when a camera was brought out. The game keepers say he takes to a cave only in bad weather, spending most of his waking hours and all his sleeping time in the crotch of an oak.

More Pee Wee Golf Courses.

New York's first indoor pee wee golf courses—well, almost first—are coming right along. There is one just off Eighth avenue in the Forties that they say is going to cost $50,000. A couple on Long Island have opened, and a lot more are getting ready. Those ultra-expensive indoor baby golf and country clubs that were broached when the pint golf craze first hit town have not materialized yet.

Just a minor note on the press agent situation, and that will be all for this week. Important looking, heavy manila envelopes are cluttering mail boxes this week urging every one to get together to elevate the publicity profession. It is the expressed aim of the organization to see that only legitimate news items make their way into newspapers. But it really is just another publicity racket. The press agents, also, are objecting to being called by such a self-explaining name—that is, the smaller fry are getting unconscious. They prefer to be called publicity engineers, public relations directors and other such high faluting names.

New Season Well Under Way

National Academy Announces Series of Lectures—Art Institute's Doors Always Open—Josimovich Exhibit Promised.

By Eleanor Jewett.

THE new season with its school activities and exhibition enterprises is well under way. The National Academy of Art has arranged a series of laboratory lectures as a part of the fall curriculum. These are to help the advanced student to acquire technique for commercial work. Once a month the art director of a large publication house, advertising agency, or department store will talk to the students and look over the best work of the class with publication in view.

During October C. H. Lawrence, art director of Book Trails and Child Life, will discuss the difference between magazine and book work. In November Margaret Raymond, editor of P. F. Volland company, will lecture on reproductive processes. Her lecture will be illustrated with various examples of the work used in Volland's gay books.

Lecture on Illustrating.

The December talk will be given by Margaret Allen, art director of the publishing division of Rand, McNally & Co. Miss Allen's talk will cover the illustration point of view. She will give the students a clear idea of just what it means to the publisher to illustrate various kinds of books—from the large flat book to the small picture book.

Frederick F. Fursman, director of the Summer School of Painting at Saugatuck, Mich., a school which is under the auspices of the Art institute of Chicago Alumni association, sent in a short notice of a successful summer. The school closed on Labor day after weeks of interesting work. Among the new features introduced this year was a series of Sunday morning lectures on art and kindred subjects.

Thomas Wood Stevens talked on the modern drama; Thomas E. Tallmadge spoke on architecture of the past and present; John Norton discussed modern murals; Ralph Fletcher Seymour talked on the development of the graphic arts, and the last Sunday morning the school was in session was devoted to S. J. Duncan-Clarke, who took modern journalism for his subject.

Doors Never Closed.

Sometimes one wonders exactly how much we do know about places and buildings and people whom we meet every day. For instance, how many realize that the Art institute has never closed its doors since it first occupied its present quarters in 1893? Visitors will find it always open, including Sundays and holidays. The free days are Wednesdays, Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays. On the other days an entrance fee of 25 cents is charged. There are four floors in the museum building. The ground floor is occupied by the school offices, the upper school, the clubroom, the restaurant and tearoom, and the museum workshops.

On the first floor are the classical antiquities, the Egyptian collection, the print exhibition rooms, the children's museum, Blackstone hall of architectural casts, Gunsaulus hall, the executive offices, and the membership department. The second floor is used primarily for exhibition purposes, the galleries being hung with paintings and many original pieces of sculpture being scattered through the halls and corridors. On the third floor is the architectural school of the Armour Institute of Technology, the students of which use the collections of the Art institute in their studies.

Across the tracks in the terrace addition, reached through Gunsaulus hall, are the period rooms, the oriental collections, the hall of casts, Spanish and antique rugs, the antiquarian collection, the Needlework guild, the Allerton galleries, the lower school, and the Goodman and studio theaters.

Studio in Miniature.

In the children's museum of the Art institute there is a fascinating scene, given by Lorado Taft, the sculptor, to the institute. It is a remarkable model of the interior of Donatello's studio in the year 1425. The work is in miniature, modeled in plaster, the figures being about twelve inches high. They are dressed in the picturesque costumes of the Florentines of that day and are tinted and colored true to life. Mr. Taft and his pupils did the modeling.

Donatello is seen with his chisel in hand at work on the statue which he humorously called "Baldhead." Here also may be seen in various natural attitudes the monk painter—Fra Angelico; the architects—Ghiberti and Brunelleschi; the artist—Masaccio; the Carmelite painter—Fra Filippo Lippi; the sculptor—Michelozzi; and several other figures. To the left may be seen Cosimo de' Medici, the great patron of the arts, entering Donatello's studio.

The entire little room, perfect in detail even to the glowing fire in the open grate, the high beamed ceiling, and the great colored glass window, is a remarkable reproduction of the original.

In the days before the fashion plate was known, in order to display the latest ideas in dress Parisian modistes dressed wax dolls as models and sent them to London and other large cities. Mlle. Martin, a famous dressmaker in Paris in the days of Marie Antoinette, originated the idea. The dolls were called "Pandores" in France and "Fashion Babies" in the American colonies. A collection of them is a recent gift to the Art institute from Miss Elizabeth McCormick. They have been on display in gallery L-4 of the museum, in the exhibition of costumes and accessories.

Permanence of Color.

The National Publishing society of Mountain Lake Park, Md., has just published an attractively practical book, "The Permanent Palette," by Martin Fischer, member of the Duveneck Society of Painters and professor in the University of Cincinnati. The book is the result of ten years of research and tells concisely but comprehensively the scientific methods for securing permanence of color. The old masters apparently knew the trick, or another as good, but not all of those who followed them were as wise. Do you remember the bomb the headlines threw into the art world with their abrupt "The works of Sargent are slowly fading into oblivion"? The present book explains the permanence of color in an intelligible and practical manner.

No-Jury Society of Artists.

The directors of the Chicago No-Jury Society of Artists are many this year. They include Emil Armin, Charles Biesel, Fred Biesel, Charles H. Cooke, Gustaf Dalstrom, Julio de Diego, Frances Foy, Murvin W. Gilbert, Emile J. Grumieaux, Hazel Johnson Hannell, Vinol M. S. Hannell, George Josimovich, A. Raymond Katz, Mae S. Larson, Minnie Harms Neebe, Rudy Ronzius, Felix Russmann, Bella Hermont Schnee, Eve Watson Schuetze, Francis Strain, and Louis Weiner.

President this year is Vinol M. S. Hannell; vice president, Fred Biesel; secretary, Hazel Johnson Hannell; and treasurer, Charles H. Cooke.

Of the directors Rudy Ronzius does beautiful and exquisite work in pewter. George Josimovich has been promised a one-man show this winter in the Chester Johnson galleries. A. Raymond Katz is extremely entertaining on the subject of modernism—entertaining and interesting. Louis Weiner is a member of the Palette and Chisel club and given to perpetrating undersea fantasies; his water colors from Arizona last year were one of the highlights of the winter.

Felix Russmann is responsible each season for some of the most delightful paintings exhibited. His flower paintings are invariably quaint, picturesque, and romantic. Though the Hannells are husband and wife, their painting is utterly dissimilar. The charm and fragrance of Mrs. Hannell's pictures are translated in Mr. Hannell's work to melancholy and "forlorn hope" realism.

"THE NORTH WIND," by Felix Russmann, a Chicago painter of merit. Mr. Russmann is a director of the Chicago No-Jury Society of Artists. He was active in the arrangement of several exhibitions last winter and his paintings were displayed in more. The painting reproduced today was exhibited in the Chicago Artists show in the Art institute this spring.

Among his finest work are his paintings of still life. Again he holds the attention when he deals with flowers as subject. Independent in thought and in work, Mr. Russmann has contributed largely to the return of the Chicago radical to an intelligible stand.

TWO OF A KIND

THE VERCELL SISTERS

"SISTER ACTS" always arouse a ripple of curiosity, and the appearance of the pretty Vercell girls—two of them—on the variety program of the State-Lake theater this week is worth noting. They are graduates of the "Vanities" and other impressive Broadway musical shows. Not much of a family resemblance may be found in this picture; but the genealogy of a sister act should never be studied too closely. The Vercells will be assisted in a tabloid revue by their "Six Boy Friends."

Salzburg Found Unforgettable

By Burns Mantle.

lunch in Munich. . . . It was still raining and we were moody. . . . Nobody bit anybody, but that could have happened. . . . Midafternoon we started on for Salzburg . . . It was still raining when we got there. . . . The hotel was stuffed. . . . They show you many gateways to each old world city in Europe, but the real gateway to any city, to the tourist, is his hotel. . . . Given a good room, a gracious "portier," who serves in place of our clerk, a good meal, and a chance to clean up, and the town takes on an interesting glow. . . . When the reception is otherwise both the town and the people are terrible and seemingly never change. . . . Our Salzburg adventure in hotels was better than the Heidelberg adventure, but not as good as many. . . . Three of us started blithely upstairs, with room assignments, to discover that, while the rooms were all right, there were still people in them, none of whom spoke anything like English, and all of whom seemed to resent our intrusion. . . . People are funny that way. I think the lady I walked in on said, "Ach!" . . . But even if it were "Hoch!" I was much too excited to understand.

Missed Seeing Reinhardt.

Thirty-ninth day. We must be getting on. The tour draws near a conclusion and things pile up. . . In Salzburg we were vain enough to think we might catch a glimpse of the great Max Reinhardt, king these days of this section. . . It was a vain hope. . . Herr Max was much too busy to be bothered. . . We rode around the Reinhardt gift house, Leopoldskron. . . At least we rode around its outside, and shouted greetings to the black swans, which probably are used to being insulted. . . Also we rode to Hellbrun [look up Marcus Sittieus] still in the rain and saw all its funny waterworks. . . Miniature theaters worked by water power; grottoes innumerable and even a banquet table at which the guests combine hydro-therapeutic treatments with their meals.

The Reinhardt festivals have made a fascinating mecca of Salzburg during the month of August each year. . . This is the tenth of them and their increasing popularity is proof of their success. . . For a month the most picturesque of old world cities is crowded with people from all over the world with an interest in and liking for the best in opera and drama. . . Each day there are at least two festival attractions and sometimes four. . . For instance, our last day there we could have heard an orchestral concert by the Vienna Philharmonic society at 11 a. m., seen a performance of "Everyman" in the courtyard of the cathedral at 5 p. m., and a performance of a comedy, "Victoria," which is W. S. Maugham's "Too Many Husbands" tricked out with a piano accompaniment, at 8. . . We missed the concert but saw the others.

Memories of Mozart.

Our first evening we heard a performance of Beethoven's "Fidelio" in the Festspielhaus, given by the Vienna state opera company and led by Franz Schalk. . . Our second evening the group was of two or three minds. . . Some saw Prof. Aicher's Marionette theater, a quite marvelous exhibit of the most human puppets I have ever seen; others heard "Don Pasquale" and others were satisfied with a performance of Goldoni's comedy, "Servant of Two Masters," in the courtyard of the Festspielhaus at 5, followed by exercises in the concert cafe. . . An inspiring memory is that of the Mozart serenade, played in a grand hall of the residence because the rain again drove us out of the courtyard with the gorgeous old hall in darkness and the music stands lighted by candles shielded by three-sided mica shades just as they were in Mozart's day. . . The conductor was Bernhard Paumgartner, who is also director of the Mozarteun, and there was a hushed and adoring audience of three hundred new world pilgrims graciously shadowed by the old world walls. . . Salzburg is unforgettable. . . It is, I think, the one spot in all the vacation world of Europe that drama and opera devotees should not miss. . . Not always for the superlative quality of the performance. . . Rather for the thrill and satisfaction of living for a little time in a perfect atmosphere of old world beauty and new world achievement. . . I am not much of a shrine worshiper, but I shall forever be glad I was privileged to make obeisance in the birthplace of Mozart and the adopted home of Reinhardt. . . Even the discourtesies of the enthroned Max can neither lessen nor change that particular satisfaction. . .

On to Vienna.

Forty-fourth day. Our group was split in two in Salzburg . . . several were obliged to be back in the states for the opening of their schools . . . we saw them off at various morning hours and went on ourselves at noon to Vienna . . . we were there at 6, which gave us time to get out to the Kursal and drink in the beauty of its casino.

Forty-fifth day. With the Austrians. We had been traveling the medieval paths of the Goths and the Huns so long that there was as much lift in the contrast of Vienna as there is in Paris . . . we found the sun here, too. . . . Vienna is a lot like Paris and the Austrians, trying desperately to make friends with the world to make up for their loss of what is now Czecho-Slovakia and the prestige that went with it, are graciousness and courtesy personified . . . here was an example of what hotel men can do . . . we were quartered in an ancient hostelry . . . I believe the emperor, Franz Josef, or one of his suite once occupied the big room I had . . . but the attendants were so splendid we even loved the rooms, and all Vienna . . . we went through the Burg theater Sunday afternoon and found it easily the most gorgeous of all the state theaters we had visited. . . . We went through the castle at Shonbrun, which the gifted Maria Theresia built to show France what they might have made of Versailles . . . and came pretty close to making good her boast . . . also we learned that Maria Theresia is no more than two down to Louis XI. on personal portraits . . . but then, having been the mother of fifteen children she naturally had a lot of time she could as well spend sitting for her portrait as in any other way. . . .

A People Now Born.

We went out through Grinsing, where the wine comes from, to Kebenal, where the view is magnificent and the gardens heavenly . . . and we went finally to an Emmerich Kalman music comedy, "Violette of Montmartre," which the Shuberts will probably buy for the score and have the book rewritten without much success . . . all of which covers three Vienna days and takes us to the forty-seventh day and Prague:

Here you find a people new born . . . everybody, from porter to busguide, speaks of "the day we achieved our independence." . . . Everybody thrills at the mention of it . . . the city of Prague has grown in ten years from 200,000 to 1,000,000 population, and is still growing. . . . We were there out of season with everybody away. . . . In season, like New Yorkers, they boasted that we would find difficulty walking even their fine, wide, but roughly paved mosaic sidewalks . . . we saw the ancient castle of the Bohemian kings being quite sensibly but ruthlessly modernized in part for this bounding new government that is President Masaryk's and all Czecho-Slovakia's pride . . . we met the secretary of the Prague Social club, who wanted us to stay over for dinner. . . . And then we went on, with the belief that within another ten years the Czechs will have added much to world history.

Dresden Proves Delightful.

Forty-eighth day. I think, if you do not mind, that I will take my Germans and my Germany by way of Dresden . . . my German adventures had been unpleasant up to now . . . in this courtly, fine, inspiring old town they were encouraging . . . I called on the Sistine Madonna and found her being worshipped in the palace by a reverent group . . . and that lovely, lovely gallery in which she lives. . . . There is no time for that now. . . . We missed the opening of the opera and the Stadtheater by a day, but we saw the gorgeous green vaults with their priceless jewels and ivories and crystals . . . we saw Sunday crowds of sturdy, forward-facing young Germans enjoying their continental Sunday . . . we saw the best, I feel, of that new Germany that is still the strongest country in Europe in man power and determined ambition. . . . And we saw another Lehar operetta, "Paginni," which I have a feeling is older than the hills intimate . . . Another sweet score tacked to an indifferent historical romance.

And now, officially, we are heading home . . . Berlin tomorrow, then Rotterdam, then the boats . . . it has been a grand adventure, but will be glad to be with you again . . . don't ask us lest we just break down and cry.

Swedish Operatic Singers Warned Against Obesity

STOCKHOLM.—(AP)—Prof. John Forssell, chief of the Swedish Royal opera and one time celebrated singer, has warned his singers—ladies and gentlemen—not to grow fat, and that those who already have grown too heavy must do their best to reduce.

"Our audiences do not alone pay to hear the singing, but expect an esthethic picture of those who execute the music," he says.

Arabians Seek to Gain Control of Pilgrims' Railroad

DJEDDA, Arabia.—(AP)—Ibn Saud is making another bid for the possession of the Hedjaz railroad.

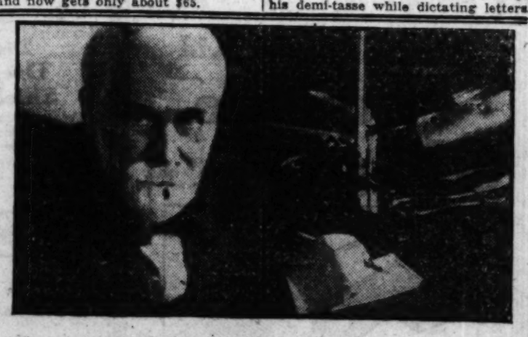
Moslems from Damascus have addressed a memorandum to him, asking that the railway be handed over to the Hedjaz government. As a result, Ibn Saud has decided to negotiate with England.

Turkey built the Hedjaz line before the war, to facilitate the pilgrim traffic to Mecca. Upon the conclusion of peace, the Syrian part of the line passed under French control and the Palestinian section under British control until the question of ownership should be settled. In the war, Bedouins destroyed the Hedjaz part of the line, and it has not been rebuilt.

Ibn Saud regards the railroad as a religious trust, since it was built with contributions from Moslems all over the world.

Slump Hits Temples.

TOKIO.—(AP)—The business depression has reacted on the 110,000 Shinto shrines, thousands of Buddhist temples and hundreds of Christian churches in Japan. Typical is the temple to the Buddhist goddess of mercy at Asakusa which three years ago used to receive $500 a day in small coins and now gets only about $65.



A Harmless Prescription, but How it Moves the bowels!

DON'T you want this way of making the bowels behave? A doctor's way to make the bowels move so well that you feel better all over! Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin doesn't turn everything to water, but cleans out all that hard waste clogging your system. It cleans you out without any shock, for it's only fresh laxative herbs a famous doctor found so good for the bowels combined with pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients.

A doctor should know what is best for the bowels. Let Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin show you how soon you can train the bowels to move freely, every day, the way they should. It's wonderful the way this prescription works, but it's perfectly harmless; so you can use it whenever a coated tongue or sick headache gives warning that you are bilious. Fine for children, too (it tastes so nice) and they ought to have a spoonful the minute they seem fretful, feverish, or sluggish, or become stuffed up with a cold.

You can get the original prescription. Dr. Caldwell wrote so many years ago; your druggist keeps it all ready in big bottles. Just ask for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and use it any time anyone in the family is constipated.

Germany Makes Coffee Drinking National Rite

BERLIN—(AP)—Germans drank 25,000,000 pounds more coffee last year than in 1928. If appearances are not deceiving, they discovered new ways of drinking it.

Actually, less coffee is drunk here per capita than in the United States, but it is difficult for an American strolling about Berlin to believe that.

Coffee is being served in so many places, in so many forms and to so many people, at all hours of the day and night, that one suspects it is a sort of national ritual.

That suspicion is strengthened if one visits some of the more elaborate temples erected here to the coffee habit.

In one very popular place, for instance, there is a large, softly lighted and richly upholstered salon for those who merely want to sit in armchairs and quaff coffee to the accompaniment of an orchestra.

Those who want good coffee but haven't the time or inclination to lounge in the salon can get quick service at the coffee bar.

Still others prefer the semi-seclusion of small but comfortable parlors, so the place has several of these; also a large upper salon, not too close to the orchestra, where the conversation is quieter.

All this, however, is merely a beginning in this particular establishment. It offers also a large room for chess enthusiasts who like coffee with their game; also a billiard parlor for men who handle their cues better amid the aroma of good mocha and java.

There are people who like a cup of coffee while having their hair cut or their nails manicured. So there is a place for these, too. Also a spacious writing room, with coffee served there.

To an American, however, the most surprising evidence of the thoroughness with which this place caters to the coffee drinker is the dictation room. There the busy executive sips his demi-tasse while dictating letters.

Swedish Postal Directions.

STOCKHOLM.—(AP)—Swedish postal authorities have asked letter writers of this country to include the name of the country in the address of letters destined for foreign parts because so many places in the United States bear the names of European cities.

U. S. Students in Italy.

FLORENCE, Italy.—(AP)—Americans accounted for 50 per cent of the foreigners who registered for summer courses this year at Florence university. Florentine art was a favorite subject.

THE VOICE OF THE FAN

If you would like your letters printed in this column please write on ONE side of the paper ONLY. If you want a personal answer send stamped, self-addressed envelope—PLEASE!

Twins Play One Role.

My Dear Mae Tinée: Does it interest you to know that the baby in "Common Clay," which you call "one of the most adorable ones ever caught by the camera," is twins? They are the little granddaughters of one of my mother's friends, who writes that because they are so nearly identical their mother takes, one to the studio in the morning and the other in the afternoon. This makes it possible for the baby scenes to be shot more quickly because a child is allowed on the lot only four hours a day.

I believe these youngsters have since appeared in several other pictures.

Your reviews are a joy, and I've come to depend on your opinion, because I find that the pictures you enjoy I usually enjoy, too.

Sincerely,
MARY COLE.

Editor's note: That is interesting! Thanks so much for the information and the pleasant words.

Menace of Some Pictures.

My dear Miss Tinée: The other day I drifted into a small movie theater and the picture was "The Divorcee." I have always admired Norma Shearer before and supposed she was a high character actress, but this picture changed my opinion.

A woman should be ashamed of herself for portraying a character like this. The play is rotten, and a really high class woman should refuse to act the part.

Mary Pickford, Mary Brian, Nancy Carroll, and several others always give us good, clean pictures that we feel safe in taking our young folks to see. I am heartily glad I did not take my young people to see "The Divorcee."

The damage that can be done to the youth by such pictures cannot be calculated.
MOVIE FAN.

Disagrees with Star Award.

Dear Miss Tinée: Yes, you're wonderful, but — really, Mae, sometimes you're awfully dumb!

Seeing you give the same number of stars to "Little Accident" as you gave to "Common Clay" breaks my heart.

"Common Clay" was everything you said it was, and then some! Your review on that picture was perfect. But I don't know how I can forgive you for calling "Little Accident" excellent. It was so silly that it became disgusting. How could anybody ever act like Douglas Jr. did about a situation so serious? It's impossibilities and unreal silliness don't deserve a star.

Excuse me for calling you dumb, but I couldn't help it. I still like you though.
E. B. W.

Editor's note: One picture is a comedy, my dear. The other is a melodrama. I thought one a 2 star comedy; the other a 3 star melodrama. We judge a picture as to its standing among its own class.

In Praise of Ann Harding.

Dear Mae: I've been wondering if I have been asleep all these months. I'm referring to Ann Harding. She's one of the most divine persons I've ever seen. I awoke to this fact while viewing "Holiday." She doesn't give you the "Well, I'm here—don't miss me" impression, but for some reason, all her own, you're always looking for her.

O, I've seen her many times before and thought her good, but—well, there's but ONE Ann, and ONE Garbo, differing as night from day. The poor tired fan takes Ann for one mood, Garbo for another, then perhaps a dash of Joan Crawford or Norma Shearer, and I ask you what could be more perfect in the line of entertainment. I do hope we see more of this Monroe Owsley, Ann's brother, in "Holiday."

Mae, can anything be done about getting the pictures here sooner? Other cities and even small towns are getting the latest several weeks before Chicago, and why?

We've been waiting ages for "Romance." When will "What a Widow!" be here? There are those and those and those who still read and enjoy your column, Mae, not counting me.
Just
M. J. G.

Editor's note: "Romance" is waiting just outside the door. "What a Widow" is on the way. Thank you, say Ann, Greta, Joan, Norma, Monroe, and I.

Peace Propaganda.

Dear Miss Tinee—This is the first time I have written to this column, but after reading that ridiculous letter from X. Y. Z. in the Sunday TRIBUNE, I simply cannot contain myself any longer. After reading X. Y. Z. all I could think of was W. H. Y. Hix, what I laughingly call criticism, was the most absurd and stupid piece of trash I have yet seen in the "Voice of the Movie Fan" and that as you know is saying a-plenty.

I thought "All Quiet on the Western Front" was the most perfect picture that has yet come to the screen. It was flawlessly directed and wonderfully acted. Of course, this picture is propaganda but until people become educated such propaganda is necessary. By its honest, real portrayal of war as it really is, it has done more for peace than anything else I know of. It carries across a stirring message which aside from its value as a picture makes it great.

In conclusion, all I can say is that this X. Y. Z. person by his remarks on "All Quiet" clearly shows that he has not yet left the ranks of the "ignoramuses who constitute 90 per cent of the dear movie public."

Sincerely yours,
FLORENCE ROSENBLUM.

P. S.—Won't you please publish this, Miss Tinee? It would give me so much satisfaction.

Editors note—We strive to please.

LAKE FOREST was gay on a recent Saturday with several events for young society. Among the girls who assisted at Miss Hortense Henry's debut reception at Sagamore Hall, the residence of the bud's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Swift, were Caroline Smith, Constance Hasler, Helen Stanley, Elinor Whiting, Miss Rosamond Moore of New York City, and Miss Dorothy Laws of Cincinnati.

Annie May Henry, the debutante's younger sister, attended the party after starring in the events of the children's gymkhana at Onwentsia earlier in the afternoon. Mrs. Gilbert E. Porter III. and Mrs. John H. McIlvaine were among the parents who assisted with the arrangements for the gymkhana. Mrs. Porter's little girls, Edith, Ann, and Polly, and Catherine McIlvaine were too young to participate in the riding, but they were interested spectators. Peggy McIlvaine won the prize for the prettiest costume, a Joan of Arc outfit of silvercloth.

Summer Residents Trek Homeward from Country Havens Round About Chicagoland

By Mlle. X.

THE rich and racy hues of early fall have begun their annual invasion of the landscape. Patches of yellow and red are already showing in the green screen of summer foliage. The golf courses and tennis courts that have bloomed so gayly with light colored frocks for the last three months are now bright with the warmer tones of autumn togs. The first faint notes of the hunter's horn sound over the far horizon. The air is crisp and invigorating, an invitation to squeeze out the last ounce of athletic energy before the epidemic of winter festivities sets in.

Although the Wisconsin woods are never lovelier and the lakes never cooler than at this time of year, many of the clubs and resorts in that part of the world have started to close their hospitable gates. Airways, highways and railways are bringing home returning vacationers, among them many of those Chicago fashionables to whom accessibility makes a strong appeal in the matter of summer outing places.

The date on which Labor day falls seems to be an important factor in determining the length of the season. If, as this year, it happens to be on the first, the final curtain is likely to be rung down around the middle of September. When it comes at the end of the first week, say on the sixth or seventh, it gives a longer lease of life to the smart out of town colonies —Lake Geneva, the Huron Mountain club, the Island Lake club, Keego lodge, the Lawsonia Country club, the Chicago club at Charlevoix, the Coleman Lake club, and others of the kind.

News of Former Residents.

That sprightly and popular pair, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Haines, whom we still claim as Chicagoans although for the last few years they have spent most of their time in the east, sailed on Friday for this country after a summer outing in Europe. They "took the cure" at Baden-Baden in August, and now, undoubtedly much refreshed, are en route for their attractive New York penthouse.

Mrs. Haines has many talents. Besides being gay and good looking, with a quick and lively wit, she is an accomplished hostess and housekeeper. She is the author of a cook book, and his year her literary endeavors swept her into the magazine field with a charming little illustrated article on "Penthouse Parties," at the giving of which she has no peer. Mrs. Haines says that writing is not easy for her—that she thinks and talks without any subject or predicate, and that when she starts putting her thoughts down on paper they seem to have no beginning and no end. Be that as it may, the finished product is good reading, full of ideas and inspirations for perplexed hostesses, and sparkling with pert little phrases and bits of imagination.

Speaking of summer reading, one of the best books that has come our way in many a moon is "Years of Grace," by Margaret Ayer Barnes [Mrs. Cecil Barnes]. Mrs. Barnes is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Ayer and sister of those two well known Chicago women, Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank and Mrs. Samuel T. Chase, and she writes of the Chicago of her growing up and more mature years with a skillful and colorful pen.

A long time friend of the author has referred to "Years of Grace" as an "Iliad of Chicago and an epic of the deep well that separates generations." Mrs. Barnes has handled her subject with admirable dexterity, but even more to her credit is the fact that she has made her character live and breathe without drawing recognizable portraits of any of her friends—although occasionally she has borrowed a trait from one or another of them, to be chuckled over as they bob up. That is a real achievement, a test not only of ability but of good taste and clever management.

Four Debuts Listed.

Just at the moment the social spotlight in this neck o' the woods is focused with steady ferocity on the first of the season's buds. Four of them have already made their bows to the fashionable world in one or another of the lovely gardens of Lake Forest: Beatrice Kirk, daughter of the Walter R. Kirks; Hortense Henry, daughter of the Huntington Henrys and a granddaughter of the Edward F. Swifts; Mrs. Edward Hasler's daughter, Constance, and the latter's cousin, Eleanor Coonley, whose parents, the Prentiss Coonleys, have divided their time between New York and Great Barrington, Mass., for the last few years, but who still look upon Chicago as their home, and both of whose daughters have "come out" here.

On Wednesday of this week, the Solomon A. Smiths are introducing their daughter, Caroline, to their many friends at a garden reception, while other debutantes of the year's group include Elsa Armour, Geraldine Swift, Josephine Dennehy, Marguerite Watson, and Lelia Withers.

Dinners, teas, luncheons and dances will crowd their calendars for the next four or five months, with a heightening of the pace during the Christmas and New Year holidays, when every night is given over to their entertainment, the ballrooms of the town engaged 'way in advance for the festivities.

Bakers Lease Italian Palace.

From Italy comes word that Miss Mary Baker and her mother, Mrs. Alfred Landon Baker, have leased the Palazzo Dona della Madonetta, on the Grand Canal near the Rialto, to be occupied by them whenever they please during the next few years. They spent March in Venice, and then went to London for the summer, with a visit in Yorkshire before returning to Italy.

Their palazzo is twelfth century Byzantine, well restored and modernized for comfort. They have a speed boat for trips to the Lido, where the Adriatic water sports will this week be the center of interest and excitement, and their friends report that they are finding life in Europe both pleasant and diverting.

Numerous Dinners Honor Yachtsmen Visiting Newport

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Much interest was evidenced here this week-end in the America's cup races. Many dinners were given in honor of the event. One of the largest was that given by Mrs. William Woodward at the Cloisters. Mr. and Mrs. Horace Binney also entertained at dinner at Bon Accuil. Others giving dinners were Mrs. Walter Belknap James, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Barton Jacobs.

Tonight Mr. and Mrs. Francis Taylor are giving a dinner dance for a hundred guests at their Annandale road villa. Another huge party was held aboard the Erin, Sir Thomas Lipton's yacht.

Commodore and Mrs. Vincent Astor, who were at Edgartown, Mass., aboard the Nourmahal, returned here yesterday for the races. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Claiborne Pell have as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Stephen H. P. Pell, Mr. and Mrs. John H. C. Pell and Col. Clifford Thompson.

Notables Arrive at Hot Springs for Little Season

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Society is arriving here for the little season. Among those who have been entertaining was Mrs. G. H. Ingalls, hostess at a luncheon at the Cascades club to Mrs. Stanley L. Wolff, Mrs. Charles McClue Clark and Elinor Bright.

Col. and Mrs. Wade H. Carpenter have arrived from New York for the fall season as have Mr. and Mrs. William J. Barney. The Marchese and Marchesa Cianinni Caregani of Naples have joined Mr. and Mrs. Charles McClue Clark of St. Louis.

Many tea parties were held on the lawn of the Casino. Among those present were Mrs. Louis Ebret, Mrs. Brooks Leavitt, Mrs. Philip Rhinelander II., Mrs. H. L. Edwards, Mary M. Brooks, and Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Painter.

Residents Depart from Southampton at Season's Close

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., Sept. 13.—[Special.]—Things are exceedingly quiet here now that the season is over. A few members of the colony lingered for the yacht races, but for the most part the houses are shut for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Esmond P. O'Brien have closed their home and gone to New York. Mr. and Mrs. Adrian H. Larkin have gone to their camp in Canada. Their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Palmer Loening, who arrived from abroad on the Conte Grande, are here for a short stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald M. Ryerson are here in their yacht Marcon. Later they will cruise to Newport and remain there some time. Mr. and Mrs. George H. Patterson returned here after spending the summer in Europe.

Captain's Well Again Bubbles in Massachusetts

AMESBURY, Mass.—[U. P.]—The Captain's Well, dug by a seaman 134 years ago as an act of thanksgiving and made famous by Whittier's poem of that name, has been restored—with variations.

It is located on a corner of the Amesbury High school grounds at the self-same spot where Capt. Valentine Bagley dug the original well in 1796. It still offers a cooling drink to thirsty passersby. But the well's romantic rusticity has been removed. It is now fed by the town water department through prosaic pipes.

The well might have been forgotten long since but for Whittier's pome, penned in 1890, reviewing the history of the well, which inspired local residents to restore the landmark at that time. The latest restoration was made possible through a $15,000 gift by former State Senator James H. Walker.

Whittier's poem tells how Capt. Bagley, after barely escaping death from thirst when shipwrecked and lost in the Arabian desert, finally returned to Amesbury and dug the well "for the Lord alone" out of gratitude.

'Idea' Man Ha a New One fo Channel Bo

Says Scheme Overco Military Objections

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—Now that Britain h jected the scheme of constru a channel tunnel, M. Ph Buenu-Varilla has had an idea. M. Buneu-Varilla had a idea about digging the Panama back in the '80s. He backed Ferd de Lesseps in that enterprise an French people lost a lot of franc fore the plan was abandoned for of cash.

M. Buneu-Varilla got another during the battle of Verdun in which was not so bad and con in piping up plenty of fresh for the poilus in the trenches filtering it by a special process he is now applying all over Fr

But M. Buneu-Varilla's newest ject is the best of all. He propo "mixed passage" for the trave of the channel, which he claim include all the best features o tunnel with none of its draw and dangers and will not be so expensive as the tube.

Would Build Jetty.

The idea is to build a long je viaduct from Calais, across the water, aimed straight for En He estimates this might be a long. From th English end, h poses a similar viaduct over shoals, stretching a mile or mo ward France. At either end of jetties he would construct eno elevators which would lower ra trains down into watertight dams to the entrance of the which would be constructed o botton of the channel to travers deeper part in the middle.

The trains would proceed th the tunnel to the other side, th be raised in another elevator jetty and thence proceed on thei to their destination.

How to Wreck It.

M. Buneu-Varilla says the mo tractive feature of this scheme i it overcomes the military obje raised in England against aban the insularity of the tight little and permitting direct ingress the European continent. In t war, the British defense comm insists, there would be danger an invading army might cross th such a tunnel and seize Englan "A few shells fired against t vators would so wreck them could no longer lower trains to the tunnel," M. Buneu- points out, adding, "A few more would destroy the viaducts leadi across the shoals." Then he ca climax by observing, "Dropping depth charges would totally d the tube under the center and part of the channel."

He estimates the scheme co accomplished by the expenditur tenth of the $150,000,000 requir the tunnels and that it could b more quickly.

Curiously, no one will even c the alternative to improving tions of the channel crossing—n the widening of the entrances Bais and Boulogne harbors to the operation of bigger boats tha now enter these ports. Channel ers are now limited to about 1 beam because of the narrow p between the jetties.

A train ferry, carrying an train, could be utilized so tha sengers could be saved the bot changing, with the attendant m of baggage porters. With pa and luggage examined on the it is believed two hours cou clipped from the present time service, reducing it to about fo one-half hours, which is about as exponents of the channel claim it could be made in.

'Idea' Man Has a New One for Channel Bore

Says Scheme Overcomes Military Objections.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—Now that Britain has rejected the scheme of constructing a channel tunnel, M. Philippe Buenu-Varilla has had another idea. M. Buneu-Varilla had a great idea about digging the Panama canal back in the '80s. He backed Ferdinand de Lesseps in that enterprise and the French people lost a lot of francs before the plan was abandoned for lack of cash.

M. Buneu-Varilla got another idea during the battle of Verdun in 1916 which was not so bad and consisted in piping up plenty of fresh water for the poilus in the trenches and purifying it by a special process which he is now applying all over France. But M. Buneu-Varilla's newest project is the best of all. He proposes a "raised passage" for the traversing of the channel, which he claims will include all the best features of the tunnel with none of its drawbacks and dangers and will not be nearly so expensive as the tube.

Would Build Jetty.

The idea is to build a long jetty or viaduct from Calais, across the shoal water, aimed straight for England. He estimates this might be a mile long. From the English end, he proposes a similar viaduct over the shoals, stretching a mile or more toward France. At either end of these jetties he would construct enormous elevators which would lower railway trains down into watertight cofferdams to the entrance of the tubes which would be constructed on the bottom of the channel to traverse the deeper part in the middle.

The trains would proceed through the tunnel to the other side, there to be raised in another elevator to the jetty and thence proceed on their way to their destination.

How to Wreck It.

M. Buneu-Varilla says the most attractive feature of this scheme is that it overcomes the military objections raised in England against abandoning the insularity of the tight little island and permitting direct ingress from the European continent. In time of war, the British defense commission thinks, there would be danger that an invading army might cross through such a tunnel and seize England.

"A few shells fired against the elevators would so wreck them they could no longer lower trains down to the tunnel," M. Buneu-Varilla points out, adding, "A few more shells would destroy the viaducts leading out across the shoals." Then he caps the climax by observing, "Dropping a few depth charges would totally destroy the tube under the center and deeper part of the channel."

He estimates the scheme could be accomplished by the expenditure of a fourth of the $150,000,000 required for the tunnels and that it could be built more quickly.

Curiously, no one will even consider the alternative to improving conditions of the channel crossing—namely: the widening of the entrances to Calais and Boulogne harbors to permit the operation of bigger boats than can now enter these ports. Channel steamers are now limited to about 35 feet beam because of the narrow passage between the jetties.

A train ferry, carrying an entire train, could be utilized so that passengers could be saved the bother of changing, with the attendant miseries of baggage porters. With passports and luggage examined on the boats, it is believed two hours could be clipped from the present time of the service, reducing it to about four and one-half hours, which is about as fast as exponents of the channel tunnel claim it could be made in.

In the Feminine Realm

Chinese women of the rising generation in Shanghai are now discarding the Chinese dress in favor of the attire of modern western women.

Women's societies in England are protesting against the rules of many clubs which prohibit serving women unless accompanied by men.

One-fifth of France's entire population of 40,000,000 inhabitants are women who work in factories, offices, banks, and other activities.

Signora Torela is the only woman to hold a general's rank in the national movement of Italy. She is the commander of a legion of Italian Fascist women.

Although women slightly outnumber the men in the Soviet union of Russia, and have the identical franchise, there is no woman's party.

For the first time in Chile a woman has assumed the duties of a judge. The new member of the bench is Miss Delia Escudero of the Minors' court.

Senora Raquel Meller has been given the Order of Alfonso XII. by the king of Spain. She is the first actress to hold this distinction.

Women ticket sellers at railroad stations in Japan average from $15 to $17.50 a month. They usually work eight hours a day, with four days off a month.

Sister Catherine Black, who was called in to nurse King George of England during the worst days of his illness last year, has received a permanent appointment to be the king's nurse.

An unusual occupation for a woman to engage in is that being followed by Mrs. L. J. Witte of Seattle, Wash., who signs herself as "pyrotechian." She is a fireworks expert. She stages dramatic fireworks displays and military sham battles, all by herself, and says she enjoys doing it.

Moslem women are now demanding rights of habitation. They want the veil abolished, permission for brides and bridegrooms to see each other before marriage, divorce made possible for women equally with men, 18 years the legal minimum age for marriage, and compulsory education of children of both sexes.

France Appeals to Tourist with Small Purse

Finds Them as Profitable as the Wealthy.

PARIS.—(AP)—France has discovered that tourists with limited pocketbooks are just as profitable as the ultra-wealthy travelers. This year she is appealing to them particularly and they have been flocking here in great numbers.

Last year, French economists estimate, tourists in France added about $400,000,000 to the value of "invisible exports." The year 1930 is expected, despite the Wall street crash and a general world trade depression, to fill the national purse with a cool half billion.

Surpass Last Year.

No exact total of the number of Americans who have visited in France this year is available, but steamship companies and associations of hotel managers figure that it is in the neighborhood of ten per cent greater than for the similar period of 1929.

The effects of the Wall street crash have been registered in a falling off of luxury purchases and in comparative desertion of the highest priced hotels. On the other hand, the "average" American, with a few hundred carefully counted dollars to spend on his European trip, seems to be spending more of them here.

Inexpensive Tours Help.

Inauguration by tourist agencies, under government encouragement, of inexpensive tours through the French countryside, has been attended with an almost unlooked for success. They have kept in France tourists who otherwise might have hurried on to another country.

Although Germany sent the greatest number of visitors to France last year, Americans spent the most money. They are credited with having left between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000 here.

Spain is second on the list of number of visitors and Britain is third. South Americans and Canadians also have been getting the "See France" habit in increasing numbers.

Coste's Wife Makes Host of New Friends

Paris Charmed by Winning Personality.

By May Birkhead.

[Copyright: 1930: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS.—[Special.]—Mme. Marie Coste, the French aviator's wife, should flutter in Hollywood dovecotes on her forthcoming visit to America not because of her husband's remarkable feat but for reasons of her own. She is a most personable young woman, extremely slender, with fine features, dark hair, deep blue eyes, a beautiful mouth, and a captivating smile.

Although she does not speak any English, she has made scores of American friends in the last few days, and can't be long in our country without multiplying that number by many thousands. She advises friends not to see her first film, but to wait for the picture which she has just completed and which is soon appearing.

A Gift for Lindbergh Jr.

One of the first items on Mme. Coste's shopping list preparatory to sailing is a trinket for Charles A. Lindbergh Jr. She is undecided whether it will be a silver rattle or a gold cup, but it will be unmistakably French and something so engraved that young Charles may have his first lesson in French from the capital.

Mme. Coste had planned on sailing on Sept. 11, but now has postponed it until October because of her husband's long tour through all the states.

Almost every night she has been the dinner guest of some admiring American. Among the hosts are Benjamin Wood and his wife, who have recently taken a historic Paris mansion for a permanent home here. Mr. Wood is a great friend of a client, Leon Bailby, publisher of the most popular evening paper in Paris, L'Intransigeant, which backed the Coste-Bellonte flight.

Mr. Wood accompanied M. Bailby to see the takeoff and describes it as one of the most thrilling moments of his life. Another guest at this dinner was Alice Delysia, the well known French actress, who has often appeared on the New York stage and is now coaching her best friend, Mme. Coste, for the latter's American trip.

Chicagoans in Paris.

Mrs. Jacob Baur and Mrs. Charles Chadwick have just returned to Paris after having occupied the Chateau de la Garoupe, near Cannes, for the Riviera season, where they entertained extensively, giving buffet suppers with dancing on the handsome terrace overlooking the Mediterranean. Among the guests were Arthur Bradley Campbell, son of the marchioness of Huntley, also Sir Henry and Lady Norman. The latter is Lord Aberconway's daughter.

Since reaching Paris Mrs. Baur and Mrs. Chadwick issued invitations to a tea to say good-by to their Paris friends before sailing on Sept. 20.

Other Chicagoans here after their travels are Mrs. Henry Patten, who has been at Ostend for weeks; Richard A. Blow and wife, who spend much of their time at Florence, where they have a villa, and have just arrived for an autumn visit, and Mrs. Rufus Dawes, the sister-in-law of Ambassador Dawes, who is stopping at the Hotel Meurice for a few weeks with her daughter.

Hindu Conquest of Moslem Wrestler Followed by Riot

MADRAS, India.—(AP)—Hindu-Moslem rioting, which followed a wrestling match at Sjevapet between champions of the two religions, has been used by British officials as a shining example of the incompatibility of these two elements in India's quarreling household.

While the Hindu Nationalists claim that the Moslems are sure ultimately to rally to the Gandhi independence campaign, the British assert that the followers of Mohammed would always shy away from the possibility of having to play second political fiddle to the Hindus.

The rioting in Sjevapet began when the Hindus assembled to parade in honor of their wrestling victor. Moslem leaders argued that this demonstration would be humiliating to the partisans of the defeated athlete and egged on their followers until the latter armed themselves with bamboo sticks and flew at the paraders.

The ensuing fight lasted several hours. When police appeared they were attacked by both sides with bottles and stones and in the midst of the mixup hooligans began looting stores. Shops remained closed for days and the police patrol in the district was doubled for a week.

DREAMS COME TRUE?

Have you ever had a dream which later came true? If you care to see it in print address "Dreams," Chicago Tribune.

Dream Job.

Although born in Germany, I had forgotten how to speak German when I had this remarkable dream.

I dreamt that I was sitting in a luxurious apartment waiting to speak to a wealthy old lady who had advertised for a traveling companion. I always had longed to travel, so I desired with all my heart to get this position.

At last the stately old lady appeared, but to my dismay, her first question was "can you speak German?" Of course I had to reply in the negative, and so lost this splendid opportunity.

That dream certainly opened my eyes, and from then on I spent an hour a day reviewing my German.

A year later I actually secured a position as traveling companion to the stately old lady I had seen in my dream. C. M.

Last week I dreamed I had a letter from an old friend inviting me to her birthday party and stating that she was 55. We had quite a good laugh over it when I related my dream, as we all know that she is very sensitive about her age. Last Saturday my husband took me to the Derby. I had never made a bet before, but I heard the odds on Reveille Boy were 55 to 1. Immediately the number of my dream came to me and I placed $1, and my husband said, "Well, this is just like throwing your money away." But that was beginner's luck with a dream. L. C.

Mining Camp.

We live on a farm in the lead mining district in southern Wisconsin. Last summer a company was trying to locate a mining range they felt sure ran through our land. One night my husband dreamed he saw the mining buildings and camp across the fence in another field from where they were drilling. They moved their drill to this place and found the lead range they were looking for. So, in the near future, my husband will see that mining camp he saw in his dreams. A. L. H.

Wrong House.

My father was a carpenter. He was thinking of building a home for his family. Quite a few years before he began planning he dreamed that a well dressed man came to him and said, "Do not plan to build that house, you will never live in it."

Five years later, when he was planning the house, he dreamt that the same well dressed man came to him and said, "I told you not to build that house, you will never live in it; you will just get as far as the porch."

My father went on and started building. He had just about completed the house when he suddenly took ill and was sent to the hospital. The house was sold and he never did live in it. A. L.

China Loses Its Mystery as Roads Develop

Buses Run Under Shadow of Great Wall.

SHANGHAI.—(AP)—The vast interior of China is rapidly losing much of its mystery by the development of automobile roads.

The Chinese Good Roads society, with headquarters in this city, recently celebrated its tenth anniversary and reports that within the decade the motor car has penetrated all the provinces of China proper and that approximately 26,0000 miles of highway are available for the traffic.

Despite the recurring civil wars and widespread banditry, the work is being pushed by both provincial and national governments.

The city of Nanchang, for example, is about 900 miles from Shanghai. It is the capital of Kiangsi province and has always been noted for conservatism. Less than two years ago, there was no pavement and no cars in that city.

Miles of Pavement.

But today Nanchang has miles of broad, well paved streets and more than 100 cars are listed at the automobile registry. A modern highway circles the city and good gravel roads, over which trucks and motor buses are doing a lively business, link the capital with provincial centers.

Furthermore, there is a project afoot to build a system of five main highways to the coast at a cost of around $6,000,000.

Up in the north is the province of Shansi, bailiwick of Marshall Yen Hsi-Shan, the "model governor" who has been trying to knock President Chiang Kai-Shek off his seat by force of arms. This district has more than 1,300 miles of motor highways in use and others under construction. Over these roads motor buses speed in the very shadow of the Great Wall.

Progress in Southern China.

Similar progress has been made in southern China. Since 1922, when Dr. Sun Yat-Sen made Canton the seat of his revolutionary movement, 8,000 miles of modern roads have been built in Kwangtung province. Kwangsi, carries this year an appropriation of $3,000,000 for road work and the 1929 fund was as large.

Way out in western China in Kwelchow, nearly 50,000 farmers and town laborers set to work last spring to grade a high road extending 100 miles north from Kwelyang, the capital, and another of 60 miles westward to the city of Anshunfu. It is now reported that fully 100,000 men are working on roads in the province and that 1,000 miles of highway will be finished this year.

Stifle Market Quarrels.

SZEGED, Hungary.—(AP)—To stifle some of the frequent quarrels in the market here, the city council has set up a summary court of arbitration which is empowered to fine disputants who do not accept its decisions as to a proper price for cabbage or fowls.

WHEN CHICAGO WAS YOUNG

By Herma Clark.

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend, Julia Boyd, of New York.

Chicago, April 22, 1874.

DEAR Julia:

It is a beautiful spring day. Will and I have been making a few calls this afternoon. We dropped in to see Bishop and Mrs. Whitehouse, and the bishop showed us the plans which John Addison, the architect, has made for a new Episcopal church and rectory, to be built on Washington street, near Peoria street, on the west side. It will be a costly and beautiful building to rank among the finest churches of the city.

The Plymouth Congregational people, too, are beginning a new church on Michigan avenue near 26th street, which will be an important addition to the churches of the south side. It will seat 2,500 people and will cost $80,000.

Two of our friends are building beautiful new homes. Marvin Hughitt has begun a fine three story and basement house on Prairie avenue. It is to be of Athen marble and will cost $12,000.

A. F. Stevenson is to build on La Salle avenue near Division street. We are pleased at every new north side house that goes up for the south side is so in advance of us that we are a little jealous.

Have you seen the May Atlantic? I always read T. B. Aldrich's "Prudence Palfrey," but this month I thought the best thing the magazine contained was Edgar Fawcett's quartet of poetic "Fancies," on the Toad, the Oriole, the Bat, and the Humming-bird. I am going to copy the Oriole poem for you. It seems to me it is a bit of word-painting which will not die while there lives one of those bright winged birds to arrest the glance by his flight.

"How falls it, Oriole, thou hast come to fly
In tropic splendor through our Northern sky?
At some blithe moment, was it
Nature's choice
To dower a scrap of sunset with a voice?
Or, did some orange tulip,
flaked with black,
In some forgotten garden,
ages back,
Yearning toward Heaven, till
its wish was heard,
Desire unspeakably to be a bird?"

I liked James Russell Lowell's poem on Agassiz, too. His description of Agassiz's personal appearance is wonderful, especially the lines which speak of

"The forehead's high-piled heap,
A cairn, which every science helped to build."

Have you read Edward Eggleston's "The Circuit Rider"? It is wonderfully touching and amusing, as well. What days those were, of a backwoods! Mr. Eggleston rightly calls that period "the heroic age." I think that is a powerful passage in which young Kike, longing for revenge on his Uncle Enoch, sits in a camp-meeting and hears the exhorter call the revengeful man "as much a murderer as if he had already killed his enemy and hid his mangled body in the woods, where none but the wolves could ever find him." And the tragedy of Kike's love is beautifully told, too.

To turn from the sublime to the commonplace, how do you like the new fashions? I have bought some new English boots, welcoming the common sense style, as a relief from the absurdly high heels we have been wearing. It is blessed to be fashionable and comfortable at one and the same time. I have indulged in a pair of the new stockings—blue and black striped. I chose the stripes running up and down, my lower limbs being somewhat too "chubby" (to use that overworked word) for the mode of the day.

Even if it is stylish, I can't be persuaded to adopt the affected fashion of curling my little finger as I lift my train, nor to grasp my umbrella in its center, and walking very fast, stab the person in front of me in the back and punch the one behind me in the stomach, at every step I take. Will calls the young lady of fashion of the day "The Windmill." O, these silly young people! But I must say the new hats are pretty and becoming. The "Cavalier" style seems to suit every face. And one called the "Riverside," which I have bought for young Martha, is lovely. She really looks good enough to eat in this pretty straw hat, trimmed with a wreath of wild flowers. Velvet butterflies are sprinkled over the brim.

I wish we could afford to keep a carriage. We used to have a buggy, but mercy! one who rides in such a conveyance now in Chicago is simply nobody! The Victoria is what I should like best, or perhaps a landau. I suppose your Victoria came from "Brewster of Broome." I understand that a certain fashionable French firm came over to this country, hoping to establish a branch carriage making industry in New York, but when they saw the landaus, wagonettes, broughams, and Victorias turns out by Brewster of Broome they hung their diminished heads, turned themselves about and forthwith sailed for France, having decided we didn't need any of their wares, and that our carriage makers could not be excelled by European handicraft.

Will says he might be able to afford to buy a landau, but he knows the initial cost isn't all that must be considered. The English coachman, who is now beginning to appear on the box of many a friend's carriage, is a terribly expensive person to live up to. "And," adds Will, with great heat, "I don't propose to be patronized, as some of our friends are, by one of his ilk, if I happen to call a carriage a 'rig,' nor to have my uncouth manners refined by a British hired man."

So we shall continue to depend on a livery stable for our carriage, I suppose.

I must close now. Much love,

MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

Footnotes.

The church whose plans Bishop Whitehouse showed Martha and Will in 1874 was long a landmark on Washington boulevard and was known as the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul. It was destroyed by fire in 1921 and because of the change of population in that neighborhood was not rebuilt. Only the Cathedral Shelter remains of the work of the church in that spot.

Plymouth Congregational church, whose building was begun in 1874, and whose pulpit was an influential one for so many years, was forced by the encroachment of business to move south. The congregation united with Kenwood Evangelical church. The walls of "Old Plymouth" on Michigan avenue near 26th street now look down on an open air garage.

Costume jewelry

One way to spend that $3 you save

Costume jewelry is merely one suggestion for spending that $3 you save by using Listerine Tooth Paste instead of tooth pastes in the 50¢ class.

Women, sternest judges of tooth paste acclaim this modern one at 25¢

Listerine Tooth Paste has passed the greatest test that can be put to a dentifrice.

Tried by more than 2,000,000 American women, the most critical buyers in the world when beauty and health are involved, it has won their enthusiastic acceptance. Old favorites at a high price have been discarded in favor of the new one at 25¢.

In order to win such approval, Listerine Tooth Paste had to establish gentleness and absolute safety in actual use. It did so—on millions of teeth of varying degrees of hardness—and never was precious enamel harmed.

It had to show quick and thorough cleansing. Not merely front and back of the teeth, but between them. It had to disclose ability to remove stains, discoloration, and unsightly tartar, quickly, certainly. And show power to preserve the lovely, natural lustre of sound, beautiful teeth. Millions now comment on how ably it performs these tasks.

The fact that Listerine Tooth Paste sells for 25¢ the large tube, effecting an average saving of $3 per year per person over tooth pastes in the 50¢ class, is another point worth remembering.

Get a tube of Listerine Tooth Paste today. Use it a month. Judge it by results only. Lambert Pharmacal Company, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

Overthrow of Government Is Threat of Finns

People Sound Death to Communism.

By John Steele.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LAPUA, Finland.—This typical farming village in Ostro Bothnia is the birthplace of a movement which probably is the first in the world spontaneously arising from an aroused people against communism, and which will probably overthrow the Finnish government and lead another dictatorship in Europe.

Six months ago few Finns except those well versed in the history of their country could have told where Lapua was, and still fewer knew of the existence of Viktori KoSola. Today Lapua and KoSola fill columns of the Finnish press, and news of their doings is beginning to filter to the outside world.

Communists Get "Ride."

Lapua is a whole night's journey from Helsingfors. It is a typical farming village, populated with comfortable farmers. It has a big church, serving a wide district, which has played a big part in what has come to be known as the Lapua movement. A few yards from the church and its pretty parsonage is a big, ramshackling farmhouse where KoSola lives.

The first attention attracted to the Lapua movement was caused by the kidnaping and "taking for a ride" of communists leaders in the neighboring towns, such as Vasa, where there are big communist movements. The rides generally ended on the Russian frontier clear across the other side of Finland, where the communists were kicked across into the hands of friends, who on one or two occasions were rude enough to shoot at them.

Peasants Storm Parliament.

Then came the breaking up of the printing office of the communist paper in Vasa and the kidnaping of two communist members of parliament, who were shipped abroad, and, it is said, beaten up. All this only attracted mild attention. But last month one morning 12,000 peasants from Lapua and surrounding districts appeared in Helsingfors, coming in trains, automobiles, and horseback. In perfect military formation they marched into parliament, and with KoSola as spokesman demanded from the president the immediate suppression of communism, the strengthening of the laws to make the suppression permanent, the deprivation of communists of all civil rights, and a reform in the constitution in the direction of greater economy and efficiency in government, including halving the number of members of parliament.

Election Is Oct. 1.

The politicians tried to temporize, but KoSola and the farmers stubbornly refused to return home until they got a promise. The bills were introduced to the diet, but they failed to get the requisite two-thirds majority for the reform of the constitution, and the diet was dissolved. A general election will be held on Oct. 1, at which the Lapua demands will be the only issue, and if the Lapuans fail to get what they want by the elections they make no secret that they will adopt other means. Communism has got to go from Finland.

Lapua for years has been the center of the pietist movement in the Lutheran church, the pietists being something like American Quakers. They wear a special dress, ignore changes in fashion, and hold frequent prayer meetings. In the history of Finland they have also been the best fighters. Lapua has also been a center of patriotic movements.

Helped Break Strikes.

When communism appeared, therefore, the Lapuans were shocked by the attacks on religion and outraged by the connection of Finnish citizens with a foreign power which was Finland's hereditary foe and from which she had won her freedom. The communists in turn concentrated in Lapua, holding anti-religious meetings, and what finally enraged the farmers was that they tried to teach the children atheism. Efforts were made to deal with them legally by suppressing their papers, but they were started again the next day under new names. The convicted communists were released and the agitation increased.

In addition to this the Lapuans helped to break a series of strikes in the harbors and industrial towns, the hands of Moscow trying to destroy the Finnish economic organization. The Lapua district alone sent 22,000 farmers and their sons to the towns as volunteer strikebreakers during the last five years. Historically, too, Lapua has tradition and patriotism. When Finland was conquered by Russia the last stand of the Finns was made at Lapua, and the last Finnish victory was won there. When the war of liberation began after the great war Lapua was the focus of the patriotic movement.

Wales Slashes His Golf Handicap to Figure 10

LONDON.—[U. P.]—The prince of Wales' golf handicap has been reduced to 10. A year ago it was 13.

Friends say the prince has been a constant visitor to the links of late and hold that his continual practice is responsible for the improvement.

But, like countless thousands of other golfers, the prince's game is affected by his return for the first three or four holes. If he survives these hurdles, the royal score usually is a good one.

Chicago's "Tin Pan Alley" Is Big Industry

ALTHOUGH known to lead the world in almost everything worth mentioning, Chicago has still another rapidly growing industry which few people are aware of. In fact, few people are aware of it as an industry at all—this business of writing popular melodies and the words thereto.

But, even though such famous melody makers as Irving Berlin and Walter Donaldson still draw our attention eastward, we have right in our midst our own "Tin Pan Alley" with a growing group of composers and lyric writers that take their places in the front ranks.

Gus Kahn, the King.

Foremost among these stands Gus Kahn, the king of lyric writers. "Yes, Sir, That's My Baby," "That Certain Party," "Sometime" and other hits have elevated him to the throne. For a long time he was a tradition in Chicago and "Lyric by Gus Kahn" was an almost inevitable accompaniment to a tune by a Chicago composer.

Mr. Kahn recently took a trip to New York to write the lyrics for "Whoopee," thereby adding to his own laurels and pocketbook and also aiding in the discovery of other clever writers in Chicago. He has just completed the musical numbers for Ziegfeld's new show, "Show Girl," written in collaboration with George Gershwin.

Other lyric writers such as Haven Gillespie, Charles Harrison, Charlie Newman and Ned Miller add to the prestige of Chicago as a song center and with their clever juggling of "moon" and "spoon" or "eyes" and "skies" help us to say it to music when we can't otherwise.

The Singing Pianist.

A melody maker not averse to writing his own lyrics too, is Joe Sanders—known from coast to coast as the singing pianist of Coon-Sanders Nighthawks. Mr. Sanders has given us such well known hits as "Beloved" and "What a Girl, What a Night!" When he writes a waltz like his latest number, "My Dear," and tells the world that he's singing it with his remarkable voice to "906 Surf," where Mrs. Sanders is listening in—well it's just too bad for romantic hearts that are tuned in on Chicago!

We can also boast those three talented brothers, the Lombardos: those aces of the air that are second to none.

Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians have a style and sweetness to their music that is just "Lombardo" and the object of many a musical scout's visit. Carmen Lombardo has composed some of the sweetest melodies ever written or sung. His "Sweethearts on Parade" will probably live for years, and "Sleepy Waters," his latest number, is a distinct achievement in a jazz number that is real music.

"Laugh, Clown, Laugh!"

Ted Fiorito, director of the Edgewater Beach hotel orchestra, has such a long list of successes to his name that to mention them all would be impossible, but outstanding among them are "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" and "King for a Day." These songs created a new style in popular music and started the vogue for dramatic recitations that has taken the place of the patter chorus in a great many late publications.

Zez Confrey, who is perhaps the most distinguished of Chicago's own writers, has created a unique place for himself in the musical world which he holds unchallenged. His compositions, while being of the type in popular demand, take their place with the classics. His ability as a pianist, which must be heard to be believed and such numbers as "Kitten on the Keys," "Dizzy Fingers," and "Poor Buttermilk" are internationally famous.

Larry Shay, writer of such hits as "Get Out and Get Under the Moon," and "Too Tired," is another composer whose name is important in song circles. Isham Jones, who gave us among other memorable tunes, "Swingin' Down the Lane," and "The One I Love Belongs to Somebody Else," and Walter Blaufus, composer of "My Isle of Golden Dreams" are writers whose credit we also attach to ourselves.

Radio a Great Aid.

Harry Sosnik, who has written the hauntingly beautiful "Old Italian Love Song" in collaboration with Clinton Klethely and Walter Hirsch, is a Chicago boy who is making rapid strides forward in the musical world.

Radio has it's own place in the melody market and the two are rather inseparably entwined; depending a great deal on each other. With our radio stars turning composer and our composers turning radio stars it is sometimes hard to distinguish between the two.

American Wins Flag Place at Antwerp Fair

Also Gains King Albert's Autograph.

ANTWERP, Belgium.—(AP)—Although the United States officially is ignorant of the fact that there is an International Fair in Antwerp, the stars and stripes in the court of honor among the flags of the nations which have used public funds to send exhibits and special representatives to the exposition.

This anomaly has aroused comment from visitors and exhibitors alike, but one and all have chuckled when they heard the story. The divergence from the rule was brought about by Arthur Sichel, who was sent to Antwerp by Harry A. Mackay, mayor of Philadelphia, to supervise a booth showing the achievement of that city during the last decade.

Appears Before Baron Terwangne.

He ran a whole gamut of officials in his attempts to get the American flag into the court and finally appeared before Baron Raymond de Terwange, director general of the fair. The latter listened and said:

"Mr. Sichel, neither your ambassador nor our own special commissioner could persuade the United States government to take part in this fair. Furthermore our dear good friend Herbert Hoover, after he came into office failed to get America into line for 1930. And now you ask me to allow official display of the American flag just because Philadelphia has an exhibit.

Yankee Persistence.

"Of course we appreciate Philadelphia's action and all Belgium is grateful for that city's token of friendship, but under the circumstances, I am afraid your request must be turned down."

Mr. Sichel, being of the plucky type, did not consider the battle lost even then.

"Baron de Terwange," he said, "the question I am going to put to you can be answered truthfully, 'yes,' and shall desist from further attempts to win this favor. The question is: 'Would you punish a child because his father is errant?'"

The baron surrendered then and there and ordered space made for the flag.

* *

Friendly with the King.

Nor was this Mr. Sichel's only triumph. Another incident that set tongues awagging occurred when King Albert, on one of his visits to the exposition, was hailed with a cheerful "good morning" as he was passing the Philadelphia booth.

A "bonjour, sire" in French, while unusual, would not have startled the democratic king who probably would have acknowledged it with a military salute and passed on. But the "good morning" in English made him look up.

Mr. Sichel bowed, the king entered the booth, asked several questions about the exhibit and departed only after he had signed a book reserved for autographs of distinguished visitors.

London Star Has a Mobile Press for Latest News

LONDON.—[U. P.]—Something new to Londoners in the way of fast delivery of late news to readers has been accomplished by a London evening newspaper, the Star, which is regularly operating a "Star Press" printing establishment in the largest delivery van.

The equipment comprises a complete composing frame and type cases, and a suction-fed Bush printing machine capable of printing anything up to three thirty line news items at a speed of up to 10,000 copies an hour.

News items are received by radio from the office of the Star. They are set up and run off in the so-called blank "fudge column" as fast as they are received. The printing can be done as the van is rushing deliveries to the more distant suburbs, but it is not customary to install the van outside big horse race, football, or other sporting meetings, enabling the spectators at the meeting breaks up to buy London papers with the very latest news about them.

The van is also equipped with a special Marconiphone amplifier and public address loud speakers through which broadcast microphone announcements can be made.

A "bonjour, sire" in French, while natural, would not have startled the democratic king who probably would have acknowledged it with a military salute and passed on. But the "good morning" in English made him look around.

Mr. Nichol bowed, the king entered the booth, asked several questions about the exhibit and departed only after he had signed a book reserved for autographs of distinguished visitors.

London Star Has a Mobile Press for Latest News

LONDON. — [U. P.] — Something new to Londoners in the way of fast delivery of late news to readers has been accomplished by the London evening newspaper, the Star, which is regularly operating a "Stop Press" printing establishment in its regular delivery van.

The equipment comprises a complete composing frame and type cases, and a suction-fed Bush printing machine capable of printing anything up to three thirty line news items at a speed up to 10,000 copies an hour.

News items are received by radio from the office of the Star and are set up and run off in the so-called flash "fudge column" as fast as they are received. The printing can be done as the van is rushing deliveries to the more distant suburbs, but it is more customary to install the van outside the horse race, football, or other sports meetings, enabling the spectators as the meeting breaks up to buy London papers with the very latest news in them.

The van is also equipped with a special Marconiphone amplifier and two public address loud speakers through which broadcast microphone announcements can be made.

Weather Adds to Society's Enjoyment of Polo Matches

By Nancy Randolph.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—[Special.]—We are being blessed with weather, and in September there is nothing more important, for on the weather depends the success of all the outdoor events that ever feature the interlude month between summer and the winter season.

The second of the polo matches, played on Wednesday, had for its setting the most glorious days. Too soon for the foliage to have turned, there was, nevertheless, just the proper tinge of autumn to the air that the warmth of the sun could not quite dispel.

Society, as on the first day of the international matches, turned out in force, with every one imaginable represented. I noted, walking along the greensward that borders the west stand, such notables as the genial Miss Payne Whitney, accompanied by her son, Jock, and the latter's fiancée, Miss Altemus.

Mrs. George H. Ingalls was there, together with her sister-in-law, Mrs. George Sloane, Mrs. A. Felix Du Pon, Mrs. Frederick P. Delafield, Mrs. Edwin Gould, Mrs. Clarkson Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Weldon, Mrs. Earl Hopping, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic W. Allen, who gave a huge dance on Tuesday at their home on Shelter Rock road at Manhasset, L. I., and Mrs. Hugh A. Murray with her daughter Paula.

In Their Newest Fall Clothes.

Clothes differed greatly from the previous match day, which had been warm and sticky. Wednesday was crisp and bright, true autumn weather, and society trotted out the newest in the fall kit.

Black is once again society's favorite color. Trimmings of fur are the thing, and the startling combination of black and white, taken with the deep tan that every one boasts just at present, makes even the plainest of notables appear most fetching.

All in all, it has been a week of events. With Belmont Park having its biggest day of the year, society was quite split up yesterday as to whether to attend the races or dash out to sea and watch Sir Thomas make what we all believe to be his last bid for the America's cup.

Not in years have there been so many people desirous of viewing the races, and the number of ocean-going parties was beyond count. Even at present there are scores of people still at sea—literally and figuratively speaking—for the parties were all in good seaging tradition, with plenty of liquids with which to wet the social whistles.

Favor Spanish Dancing.

One of the innovations of the fall is in the way of dancing. All summer, at Newport and down the Long Island strand, the younger notables showed their preference for adagio movement in the matter of terpsichorean activity. This winter all will be Spanish, with the tango coming more to the fore and Spanish singers of muted love songs being quite the rage. The Montmartre has gone completely continental, with musicians in wine colored jackets, artists' tams, and handsome basques smiting guitars as they sing of old Madrid.

For the rest society is busy getting its fall clothes in preparation for the weeks at White Sulphur and at Virginia Hot Springs. And those who tend to society's wants are more than busy arranging new things.

Emily Frelinghuysen Engaged.

With the cool weather Cupid has picked up his spirits and a number of new engagements have been announced. Former Senator and Mrs. Joseph S. Frelinghuysen of New York and Far Hills, N. J., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Emily, to H. Edward Bilkey, son of Mrs. Charles Bilkey of Wisconsin.

Emily Frelinghuysen, a Junior leaguer, naturally, attended Miss Chapin's school and Vassar before making her debut. Through her father she is descended from an old Dutch family who were among the first settlers in New Jersey.

Young Bilkey, a member of the University and downtown clubs, is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin. No date has been set for the wedding, which, however, will take place some time this autumn.

Of Colonial Ancestry.

Another engagement of note is that of Florence Davis Reid, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Henry Reid of New York and New Canaan, Conn., and Frederick Beasley Alexander Jr., son of Mrs. Lounsbery Alexander and Frederick Beasley Alexander. Florence Reid is a descendant of the Robert Lockwood who arrived in 1630 with Gov. Winthrop and later settled in Greenwich, Conn. She attended the Spence school and Miss MacLean's school in Paris.

Fred Alexander is an old Pomfret boy and a graduate of Princeton, '28. He is a descendant of Richard Lounsbery, who settled in Rye, N. Y., in 1640. His father was a member of the Davis cup team and national tennis doubles champion in 1906, 1907 and 1909. Young Alexander is a member of the Princeton club, the Princeton Charter club, Sons of the Revolution, Society of Colonial Wars, and Society of the War of 1812.

Another Engagement.

Still another engagement is that of Ellen Pierrepont Luquer, daughter of Mrs. Lea McIlvaine Luquer of Mount Kisco, N. Y., and Bar Harbor, Me., to Thomas Lyon Purdy.

Ellen is the daughter of the late Lea McIlvaine Luquer, whose father, the Rev. Lea Luquer, was rector of St. Matthew's church at Bedford, N. Y., for more than fifty years. Her mother, before her marriage, was Anne Low Pierrepont of Brooklyn. Ellen attended the Shipley school at Bryn Mawr and made her debut at the Colony club in 1928. She is a member of the Junior league.

My Funniest Experience

Did you ever have a funny experience that makes you smile whenever you recall it? If you did and care to pass it along, write to Funniest Experience editor, Chicago Sunday Tribune.

Got His Goat.

A friend of mine lived in a sawmill town. Her husband was a lumber salesman and was away frequently. When he was away a little girl stayed with her nights. One night there came a thump, thump on the back door. Very much frightened, my friend asked who was there. The reply was a series of thumps. She boosted the little girl up to look through the transom. It was a billy goat, one of two belonging to her landlord, who had once lived in the house. She called him. He was cross at her for waking him up. "Let him in," he shouted. "That's what he wants."

"Come right over here and get this goat," she returned. "If I have to get that goat I'll get him in my night shirt," bawled back the old man. "I'm not going to dress."

"I don't care whether you get him in your night shirt or not—but—you—get—him."

And while she waited for the man the goat thumped and thumped at the door. Finally in the moonlight she saw a white figure coming down the street. It was the landlord — barefooted and in his night shirt. And a funny looking figure he was. But he took the goat away. And it was funnier still seeing him walking away with it.

J. T. T.

"Seat!"

A Danish bride came to this country and was trying hard to learn English and doing quite well. One day the friends she was visiting heard her going all over the house following her husband around and about every other word yelling "Scat" at him. They told her that that was not a nice word to call to her husband. She said she couldn't see why it wasn't when it was the Danish way of saying "dear."

T. B.

Butter, and How!

My father came from Germany and one time took his whole family back to visit his mother. In Germany, at breakfast, rolls without any butter are usually served or only one small pat of butter to each person regardless of how many rolls he eats, so dad warned his mother that we were used to having "lots of butter" for breakfast. When the four of us reached the table there was four pounds of butter on it for breakfast.

T. B.

Badges Mixed.

I am a short, plump woman, and on my way to a temperance meeting, I discovered I had forgotten to wear my badge, so I sent my youngster back for it, explaining to her that it was a blue ribbon with gold letters. She pinned it on my dress. At the meeting I noticed many of the members smiled when I greeted them.

Finally toward the end of the meeting, one of the ladies said, "Pardon me, but what is that ribbon you are wearing?"

"My temperance badge," I answered. "But, my dear, it says, 'Interstate poultry show, first prize—bantam.'"

Mrs. W. M.

A Short and Strained Call.

Mrs. J——, a friend of mine, saw the new minister coming up the walk to make his first call. She didn't feel prepared to make a first good impression just then, so decided not to be at home. In order not to be seen through any of the many windows, she quickly slipped out into the kitchen and laid down on the floor at the end of the range.

She heard him ring twice, then waited a few minutes to be sure he was gone. A slight noise at the open back door directly opposite her attracted her attention and she looked directly into the eyes of the embarrassed clergyman who had been more aggressive than she had supposed.

Hastily gaining her feet, she made an apology for not hearing the bell, but the call was a short and strained occasion.

The bride and groom are graduates of the University of Chicago, where she was a member of the Quadrangler club and he of Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity. After a wedding trip they will reside at 5514 Blackstone avenue.

MONEY MADE AT HOME

How you have made or are making money at home is of interest to other women. Would you care to tell them about it? Address Money at Home, Sunday Tribune.

Make-overs.

One woman I know made money at home by running a little make-over business right in her own home. She had cards printed announcing, "Don't throw your old dress away; make it like new, Elaine's Make-Over Way."

She could take the most hopeless looking old dresses, and combine them with one another, or trim them with new trimmings, or combine with some other material, and make them look like something from Paris—almost, at little expense.

She charged according to the work involved, of course. Often she would do a job of dyeing, which was something she did very well, and because she lived in a neighborhood where there were many working girls who could not take the time, or did not know how to fix up their own clothes, she had more than she could do.

She has moved into a little shop of her own now, that is why this is in the past tense, but I want to mention the fact that she earned the money for this new shop herself, and incidentally a brand new car, besides.

H. G.

Food Service.

One of my dearest friends is a young newly-wed, who, like so many others just starting out, found that there were numerous things she needed to begin housekeeping comfortably which she really couldn't afford. One day as she was getting her noonday luncheon, an idea came to her.

She would prepare luncheons for the folks at the office where she had worked before she married—take them over in her car all piping hot, and make them reasonable enough so the girls wouldn't feel that they had to pack them for themselves in the mornings any more. She remembered how she had hated scurrying around mornings to get something ready and how it never seemed to taste good after she had stored it in her desk all forenoon.

Martha talked the plan over with a few of her old friends and they were so enthusiastic about it that at the beginning of the next week she had launched her business. She made up just a small quantity to start of dainty sandwiches, thick slices of devil's food, cookies, deviled eggs, pickles, stuffed tomatoes and delicious pies and tarts. These she displayed on a shelf Herb had built for her, which could be let down or folded back on the side of the car at will. She filled paper cups with hot chocolate or milk or coffee from the thermos bottles she carried and brought along a basket of fruit for emergencies.

The first month she was able to buy the little gateleg table she'd been wanting. Now, at the end of seven months, she has a new electric sewing machine and a neat savings account, as well as many appreciative friends.

In the Feminine Realm

Mrs. Arthur Rabb, wife of Sheriff Rabb of Bloomsburg, Pa., is turnkey and "hostess" of the county jail.

In Germany the Prussian state life saving medal was awarded for the first time in history to a woman. Martha Schmidt, aged 18, won this honor after having saved a youth from drowning at the risk of her own life.

Mrs. Adella Hughes has the distinction of being the only woman in the world who has organized and manages a great symphony orchestra. The Cleveland Symphony orchestra, composed of 87 musicians and one of the twelve major symphonies in the United States, is her achievement.

Youthful lines plus Princess Style make A PERFECT FIGURE

Nature's Rival greets the season of Fall with a host of beguiling new foundations. But the gayest, most youthful, the darling of them all is the Princess Nariva design. Note in the picture above its slim shaping of the figure—how points and curves unite to form a garment of perfect lines. Every modern woman, from the school miss to her mother, will delight in this charming model. For it combines restraint with suppleness—moulds firmly, yet contains no stays.

Other foundations, also, follow the season's luxurious trend. They are made of rich, soft fabrics in latest princess style—with long, sleek hip, slender waist and graceful, uplift bust. Girdle-Brassieres, Circle Sashes, Step-ins, Bandettes, Garter Belts—all await your inspection. See them before you buy your Fall frocks. In leading stores and shops.

School Founded for Bible Study Meets Success

Registers Students from All Parts of World.

By the Rev. John Evans.

THE American Institute of Sacred Literature, a member of the University of Chicago family of educational institutions, was founded to meet the needs of ministers and laymen who wish to keep abreast with the advances in religious scholarship. According to Miss Georgia L. Chamberlain, executive secretary of the institute, some 10,000 persons in America and other countries are annually enrolled to study under the institute's direction.

It is often pointed out that many people, unable to study religious literature in residence at a university, are baffled by the marked progress made by recent biblical scholarship. Many questions are in their minds, but contact with biblical or theological teachers who may give authentic answers is difficult or impossible. The Institute of Sacred Literature was organized by the late President William R. Harper to meet that precise need.

In the courses of study offered by the institute, for instance, is listed the subject, "The Truth About the Bible." For at least 400 years controversy has raged in the Christian world over the Bible. It is now admitted by careful students that there is far more agreement among scholars about the Bible than most people suppose. In other words, leaders assert that the time has arrived when "The Truth About the Bible" can be told.

Study Source of Bible.

This course, according to the institute's announcement, has been developed by an interdenominational group of leaders which includes such teachers as Prof. E. F. Scott, Union seminary, New York; Dean Shailer Mathews, University of Chicago Divinity school, and eight other recognized teachers. How the books of the Bible came to be, how they were selected, and how to use the Bible are among the many questions the course aims to answer.

The institute conducted nineteen outline Bible study courses during the year 1928-'29, one of which was "The Truth About the Bible." A new course recently developed during the last year was "Finding God in the Beautiful." The announcement states that "This course proceeds from the Bible into the exploration of such channels of the beautiful as may be illuminating in one's search for experience of God." Poetry, music, drama, painting, sculpture, architecture, nature and character are among the types of expression explored.

Thousands of students of these courses in all sections of the country carry on their work in local groups. Institute leaders state that in many communities students have banded themselves together, frequently under rotating leadership, in order that free discussion will draw the fullest value from the printed lectures. On the other hand the courses last year reached 4,000 individual students—people who wish to do daily Bible reading under scholarly leadership. Dean Mathews has stated that the courses are prepared for the untechnical reader who wishes to spend 15 minutes a day in constructive reading.

Certificates Are Granted.

While no university credit is given for the outline Bible study courses, the institute has developed certain studies for which certificates are granted. A few courses are offered under the institute's direction which give university credit toward degrees.

Clergymen frequently complain that it is difficult to keep pace with current thought in religious matters while they are actively engaged in pastoral duties. Approximately 50 reading courses, each suggesting four or five books, are offered to ministers by the institute. These courses cover such fields as theology, Bible, science, and biography, and are arranged with reference to ministers' interests.

Forty per cent of the students registered in institute courses live west of Chicago, 50 per cent are east of Chicago, and 10 per cent south. Newfoundland, Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, Hawaii, New Zealand, Congo, Japan, China, Ceylon, India, and near east countries are represented by students. The daily mail for the year approximates 7,000 letters. Of this number, 4,819 letters contained requests for added information on course material. The number of pieces of mail sent out from the institute headquarters in Swift hall at the University of Chicago reach the annual total of 840,000.

Gilbert K. Chesterton, well known English author, will lecture this fall for Loyola university. This announcement from the Loyola faculty stated that the date set for the lecture is Oct. 11, when Mr. Chesterton will speak on the subject, "The New Enslavement of Women," at Orchestra hall.

The Rev. Prof. James Magner of Quigley seminary will be the September speaker at the Holy Name Cathedral Convert league. The meeting will be held in the lower assembly hall of the cathedral Wednesday evening. It is announced that Father Magner will give an illustrated lecture on the Holy Land. The Convert league is an organization which includes the entire Catholic archdiocese of Chicago.

A youth's temperance education convention sponsored by the young people's division of the Chicago Church federation and cooperating societies will be held at the Chicago temple, Clark and Washington streets, on Oct. 11. The plan for the convention originally announced by Walter R. Mee, general secretary of the federation, provided for a complete review of the prohibition situation in America in order that the young people might hear all sides of the question and establish their convictions. The present announcement issued by the young people states that Deets Picket, research secretary of the board of temperance, prohibition, and public morals of the Methodist Episcopal church, will represent the opposition to prohibition in the country. The Canadian system of governmental control of liquor distributed will be described by Ben Spence, managing director of the Canadian prohibition bureau. Mr. Mee said that Mr. Spence "is not entirely satisfied with the working of the Canadian system." Registrations are expected to reach 2,000.

MISS HELENE STULL.
[Bloom Photo.]

Mr. and Mrs. John Stanley Stull of 4934 Roscoe street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Helene, to Clarke Stanley Reid, son of Mr. and Mrs. John William Reid of El Paso, Ill. Mr. Reid attended Illinois Wesleyan university and is a member of Sigma Chi fraternity. The wedding will take place next summer.

Italians Will Save Churches of Quake Area

Believe Almost All Can Be Reconstructed.

MELFI, Italy.—(AP)—A dozen cathedrals, noted churches and castles of this Apennine region, damaged by the earthquake that took 2,300 lives, are in the hands of architects and reconstruction experts. It is believed that almost all can be saved.

The 12th century cathedral here stands with its cupola and front seriously cracked. These sections will be demolished and new ones built. Works of art that cannot be removed will be protected by small sand bags, as was done with many monuments in Venice during the war.

Upper Part of Towers Lost.

The castle of Melfi, important in Italian history, lost the upper part of its cyclopean towers. These will be restored at a cost of $20,000, which the proprietor, Prince Doria, will probably assume himself.

The picturesque church of Monticelli will have to be demolished, although its steeple is intact. Some parts of the churches of the Carmine and San Lorenzo will have to be reinforced.

The cathedral of Rapolla, a jewel of the 12th century, and that of Atella, a marvelous work of the Angevin period, many times rebuilt, are both in serious condition and will need temporary support until they can be permanently restored.

Frescoes Damaged.

The beautiful cathedral of Acerenza, which King Victor Emmanuel of Italy especially admired on his visit to the earthquake zone, has its front intact, but the cusp of the steeple, which is of the 15th century, has collapsed.

The famous Byzantine frescoes of the 12th and 13th centuries in the cathedral of Monticchio are damaged and require attention.

All these towns are out of the usual path of tourists, but their architectural monuments are gems of the first water, and their loss would be keenly felt in the art world.

Women Take Up Numerous Jobs in English Town

BENFLEET [Essex], England.—[U. P.]—Women have the commerce situation so well in hand in this village that there is some discussion that the "Ben" is much too musculine and the name should be changed to give it more of a feminine touch.

The best barber in town is Mario Nunn who says any one can be a barber if possessed of a steady nerve and is a teetotaler. She boasts that she hasn't nicked a chin in 12 years.

Mrs. J. Keats doesn't promise that her work will be painless, but as the leading dentist she assures one that the job will be neatly and efficiently done.

Many men buy their Sunday clothes from Mrs. E. E. Good, known as "a woman man's outfitter."

There are also women newspaper vendors, fruiterers and taxicab drivers. Mere man can find some consolation at a shop of the village smithy who has a daughter capable of doing part of his work but thus far has resisted this invasion.

Church Notes

The Divinity school of the University of Chicago announces the publication of a book, "The Issue of Life," by Dr. Henry Nelson Wieman of the divinity school faculty.

Nearly 350 seminarians studying for the priesthood of the Roman Catholic church returned last Thursday to St. Mary of the Lake seminary, Mundelein, to continue their studies after the summer recess.

A conference for foreign missionaries of the Presbyterian church will be held at Fourth Presbyterian church Sept. 26, in preparation for the zoning campaigns in the north central district of the Illinois Presbyterian synod. The conference will be conducted by the Dev. W. P. Schell and the Rev. Dr. George H. Trull.

New Phonograph Records Are Reviewed by the Music Critic

With this issue of The Sunday Tribune a certain amount of space is appropriated each Sunday for a consideration of current phonographic records. It is to be an effort to itemize as intelligently as possible the new recordings as they are released from week to week and month to month, to give the record buying public information of the important things that the recorders are doing, and to chronicle the steps in progress being made by this phase of art preservative.

By Edward Moore

[Music critic of The Tribune.]

IT is no small task to begin a new department of this sort. Even the selection of a title presents its problems. Shall this column bear the title of disc-losures, disc-retions, disc-riminations, disc-courses, or disc-ussions?

There is no desire on the part of any one to make it weighty, pedagogic, or educational. That records can become educational when systematically applied there can be little doubt. Whole books have been published showing how the musical tyro can, by a proper selection of records, begin with nothing more complex than the rhythmic throb of Indian drums and end with expert appreciation of the finest and most involved symphonies.

The present column, however, contemplates nothing as consciously uplifting as that. It will operate on the theory that music, the best music of the world, is something meant to be enjoyed; that it is part of the good things of life. If one, or many, of the record enthusiasts should start as a jazz fan and graduate from that condition into an abiding fondness for the Well Tempered Clavier, so much the better, and the editor of this column will be the first to extend congratulations. Meanwhile the column will be conducted as painlessly as possible, and jazz as well as symphonic music will get due mention.

Opera in Thirty Parts.

So gather around and let us look about us to see what the recording companies have been doing within the last few months. Columbia, for instance, tells of the opera "Carmen" as done by artists in the Paris Opéra and Opéra-Comique in French. It is issued in thirty parts, collected in two albums, and is registered under the name of the Columbia Operatic Series No. 1.

To be sure, the thirty parts, or fifteen discs, will cost you $30. But stop and think for a moment. Thirty dollars represents five admission tickets to the best seats of the Chicago Civic Opera company. You could go alone to five different operatic performances. If, as most do, you go with a companion, your third visit would more than outweigh the price of this set of records. Consider also how many dozens and scores and hundreds of times the records can be played, until you are thoroughly in touch with every note of the Habanera, the Seguidilla, the Gypsy song, the Flower song, Micaela's aria, the various choruses, and all the other details of Bizet's golden score.

It might as well be announced now, once and for all, that this column will not, save in exceptional cases, treat of the cost of records. It will not be concerned with considerations of whether this world famous soprano's record at $3 is to be considered worth twice as much as that transcontinental pianist's record at $1.50. Its chief interest will be whether this soprano and that pianist have made recordings of music worth the while of prospective purchasers, and whether the recordings have been made in a worth while manner.

The Dance of Salome.

Let us pass on. Victor's record of the month in the field of great music is the dance of Salome from Richard Strauss' opera of the same name, played by the Philadelphia orchestra under the direction of Leopold Stokowski. This is a work infrequently heard in America. Only when Mary Garden and the Chicago Civic opera come to an agreement about the desirability of presenting the work, or when Mr. Stokowski in Philadelphia or Mr. Stock in Chicago take batons in hand to present orchestral excerpts from its score, does the American public get any chance to hear Strauss at his most melodramatic and gruesome.

No question about it, Mr. Stokowski is a musical showman of the first order and the Philadelphia orchestra is a band of unbelievably expert musicians. The shrill dissonances, the astonishing instrumental effects, the thrilling melodies of this famous dance are all presented in the most vivid fashion. The recording requires three twelve inch sides. The fourth is taken by a "Javanese Nocturne," founded upon native Japanese music and developed into its present form by Henry Eichheim.

Under the title of the Musical Masterpiece Series, Victor presents the same Philadelphia orchestra, this time conducted by Sergei Rachmaninoff, in his "The Isle of the Dead." There are some, the editor of this column among them, who preserve a recollection of Rachmaninoff's first appearance in Chicago twenty years ago, how he reintroduced his Prelude in C sharp minor, which devastated the country until even he refused to play it further in his piano recitals, how there were discussions whether the accent should fall on the second syllable of his name or the third, or whether all should be stressed equally, how what he did and said and thought suddenly became matters of intense interest.

At any rate, his first appearance in Chicago was as conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra in "The Isle of the Dead." Musical historians know that it was inspired by Arnold Boecklin's painting of the same name, a gloomy subject, translated into austere, solemn, mournful music in masterly fashion. Later it was learned that Rachmaninoff could smile in his music, if seldom in person, but this time his magnificent saturninity was the talk of the town, as it still deserves to be.

Lighter Specimens.

But perhaps one may now consider a few of the lighter musical specimens. Victor tells of "Sing, You Sinners," intoned in high spirits by the Revelers. On the other side is the breakfast table fantasia, "Looking at You," sung by Lewis James, who takes high rating as a member of the same famous organization.

Others are for the present briefly listed. Among them are:

Roy Evans, who yodels in "I Lost My Gal from Memphis" and "Ro-Ro-Rolling Along." [Columbia.]

"Give Yourself a Pat on the Back" and "When the Organ Played at Twilight," played by Jack Hylton and his orchestra and recorded in England. The second part brings in the organ from Mme. Tussaud's cinema, with an organist named Edward O'Henry. [Victor.]

Brunswick releases a series of what it calls "race records." In the list are "Friendless Gal Blues" and "Death Cell Blues," by Mary Johnson; "Freight Train Yodeling Blues," in two parts, by Gene Campbell; "Hold to God's Unchanging Hand" and "I'm Gonna Tell My Jesus Howdy," by Sister Cally Fancy [according to the catalogue these last two are "Sanctified Vocal with Harp and Guitar"], and "Get Away Blues" and "I'll Go with Her Blues," by Robert Wilkins.

Brunswick also adds to its Hall of Fame, local and international. In the first classification comes Michael Bohnen, baritone, in the prologue to "Pagliacci" and the Toreador song from "Carmen"; also Max Rosen, violinist, in Dobrowen's "Fairy Tale" and De Falla's "Spanish Dance." In the second appears the Orchestre de l'Association des Concerts Lamoureux of Paris, Albert Wolff, conductor, in the four parts of Debussy's "Petite Suite" [four sides]; Alexander Brailowsky, the pianist, in the B flat mazurka and G sharp minor Fantasie Impromptu, both by Chopin; the Gnarneri String quartet in the second and fourth movements of the Mozart quartet in G, and the chorus of La Scala, Milan, in choral excerpts from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Don Pasquale."

Lack of Work Seen as Spur to Education

NEW YORK.—[U. P.]—Unemployment will give a tremendous impetus to educattion—especially adults education and reeducation—it is forecast by G. E. Marchand, president of the National University society.

"Beginning with the very opening of the fall terms in schools of every kind," Marchand says, "we may expect to see greater numbers than ever applying for instruction in technical and commercial subjects. Night, continuation, and commercial schools should lead.

"The reason for this is that the unemployed fall into three great classes: The young high school and college graduates who find themselves unequipped by an ordinary academic education to find suitable work; those who have been employed but are not now because they lack modern business and technical education, and that older group who have been employed for years but whose ideas and methods have become obsolete and who are now seeking reeducation in modern business methods and ideas. They realize education must be continuous throughout life."

Marchand announced that the National University society, which, by means of motion pictures, stage plays, and charts, provides an intensive review of modern business ideas and methods and emphasizes personal success, will meet this new demand for education by extending its work to 12 "coaching capitals" at strategic points throughout the country. They are: New York, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland, St. Louis, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Seattle, San Francisco, and Washington.

Marchand is a lawyer by profession. Twelve years ago, however, he attracted attention by spectacular success he had made in manufacturing. At the age of 36 his fortune exceeded $1,000,000. He then retired from business to found the National University society, through which to teach the methods he himself has found successful in business.

MISS EDITH LANDE.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Lande of 5207 Ingleside avenue announce the engagement of their daughter, Edith, to Morris L. Marshak of Sheboygan, Wis.

ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN

SMOKING in public is forbidden to women in Italy.

Women on the streets of Cairo, Egypt, with short sleeves, under a new law, will appear immoral.

Miss Elizabeth Farley of Amherst, Mass., is the only young woman of New England who owns and operates a milk route.

Women toreadors are employed by bullfight promoters in Portugal to stimulate the waning interest in the sport.

Dr. Charlotte Lorenz, aged 36, of Berlin, Germany, is the first woman to pass the examination as an official interpreter in Turkish.

"Schools" for training brides, bridegrooms, and bridesmaids who are to figure in fashionable weddings are operated in London, England.

Mrs. Minnie Lott, mother of two children, of Grand Rapids, Mich., claims to be the only woman stone mason in the world.

Mrs. M. J. Lenoir of Selma, Ala., is working toward the organization of women's cotton clubs in the state. Club members would wear cotton clothing.

Miss Lorraine Mackintosh, 18 year old student at Polytechnic Senior High school in Los Angeles, Cal., raises spiders as a hobby.

In addition to the several notable records established by women flyers, they are now serving as commercial, transport, test, and demonstration pilots, are selling all kinds of airplane equipment, teaching courses, holding down executive positions with large firms, and are also taking an active part in airport management.

The Finest Sarouks from the Land of Fine Rugs $365. Closely Woven Rugs—Every Rug Is Perfect!

Mandel's personal representative in Persia selected these Sarouk rugs—that are amazing values at $365. Each is individual in character, color and pattern. Lustrous in sheen, with intricate designs on grounds of rose, blue and mulberry. Every rug different.

Woven tightly, as are all good Sarouks, with every knot firmly tied by hand, and woven through three threads. Firm, yet so pliable they may be folded compactly. Breath-taking in their beauty—suitable for the most luxurious of homes—yet modestly priced.

Mandel's Oriental Rugs—Eighth Floor.

A Sarouk from Mandel's Is Like 'Sterling' on Silver

You know you are getting a Sarouk when you pay for one at Mandel's. You are protected on quality and price—when you buy your Sarouk.

Many Orientals copy the fine designs found in Sarouks! They may be good rugs—and worth money asked for them! But they are NOT Sarouks! Just as imitation diamonds are not real diamonds!

Oriental Rugs, marked only as "room size," are doubtful bargains, regardless of low price. At Mandel's the size is given as accurately as possible.

Every Sarouk is judged by the firmness of its weave, the intricacy of its design, and its coloring. The better these are — the higher the quality.

And all the Sarouk rugs in this Sale are firm, closely woven—beautiful additions to your home.

Pay for a Sarouk Out of Income

In buying one of these fine Sarouks use Mandel's Co-operative Plan of

DEFERRED PAYMENTS

as in all purchases of $50 or more in any Home Furnishings Department. It is a convenient time payment plan!

Here's An Opportunity to Save!

AAA-1 SALESMEN
There Are Now Over 30 Million Bona Fide Prospects for the Kankakee Steamer in the United States

At the present rate of production there will be over 30,000,000 more prospects for the KANKAKEE STEAMER within the next few years. Statistics of purchasers are compiled months of reports showing several times to twenty-five times as many as the KANKAKEE STEAMER will own this year.

The following is quoted from a letter from a prominent company which is now the owner of a KANKAKEE STEAMER on a Brill car for hauling twenty tons:

"We installed the KANKAKEE STEAMER on June 14. During the month of July it gave us a saving of 1295% on the total cost of the STEAMER."

The facsimile letter from this railroad is a part of our sales kit. During the last few days we have made duplicate installations for some of the largest railroads in America. Dozens of other letters in our sales kit show equal or greater savings.

However, there are three other features of far more importance than the saving effected.

We have a big job ahead of us and will need a force of salesmen on a small part of the sales available. It would amount to many millions of dollars. Because each salesman can handle a single unit sales until he has built his business. Then men who can qualify can sell a dozen, a hundred or a thousand or more units per year, one at a time. This work should pay any salesman or sales executive all he is capable of making for the next fifteen years.

We are acting as our own distributor in Chicago. Outside of Chicago we will give exclusive territory to distributors who will produce a reasonable volume of business in proportion to the territory in which they are operating.

For further details, call, write or wire, giving your qualifications,

Kankakee Steamer Co.
810 South Michigan-av.
